Dramatic Move Hinted By Nixon on Watergate

(Combined Wire Dispatches)

CAMP DAVID, Md. — President Nixon sought in the solitude of his mountaintop retreat Saturday to settle on his next steps in the swirling Watergate scandal.

Sources raised the possibility of dramatic, surprise moves by the President—perhaps next week—in an effort to defuse what has become the most serious crisis of his political life.

But no firm evidence was available to indicate that Nixon had decided to do. Rather, indications were that the chief executive had chosen on a rainy, spring weekend to assess his options.

Meanwhile, there were these Watergate developments:

—Sen. William F. Proxmire, D-Wis., said William D. Ruckelshaus will be serving illegally as acting FBI director unless his nomination is submitted to the Senate for confirmation within 30 days.

Nixon canceled a meeting with his main economic strategists to spend the weekend at Camp David, Md., the "mountaintop" where he frequently goes to weigh major decisions. This time he had only personal aides with him — and absent were his two top White House advisors who usually accompany him everywhere, chief of staff H. R. Haldeman and domestic affairs assistant John D. Ehrlichman.

Amid reports that Haldeman and Ehrlichman were fighting to keep their jobs, Sen. Robert J. Dole, the Republican national chairman in 1972, said the two men ought to resign. The Kansas senator also said members of Nixon's re-election camp "were questioning everyone's loyalty to the President during the campaign, but now they're jumping off the ship saying 'this guy did it' or 'that guy did it.'"

Acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray III, a long-time Nixon associate, and Assistant Commerce Secretary-designated Jeb Stuart Magruder, a former White House aide and deputy campaign manager, resigned as the weekend approached.

Dwight L. Chapin, Nixon's appointments secretary, and Charles Colson, his special counsel, resigned earlier this year to take private jobs.

Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell quit as campaign manager two weeks after Watergate.

All five men — and others — have been linked in some way with the allegations.

Ehrlichman, free from earlier speculation about Watergate, acknowledged during the week that he was present at a meeting in his office when White House Counsel John W. Dean III gave Gray a large envelope taken from a White House safe used by convicted Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt Jr.

It was reported Gray was instructed not to let the documents "see the light of day" and that he had them burned. Hours after these reports, Gray quit without denying any of the allegations.

Nixon quickly appointed Ruckelshaus, head of the Environmental Protection Agency, to take Gray's place — and abruptly flew to Camp David.

Haldeman, said to hold the second most powerful post in the executive branch by virtue of his control over access to the President, had helped assemble the staff and the machinery for Nixon's 1972 campaign.

Syrian Army Put on Alert, Fears Attack Imminent

United Press International

Syria was reported to have placed its army on special alert Saturday, and Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir said Israel is prepared for a new war in the Middle East.

Syrian President Hafez Assad put the army on special alert because of fears that an Israeli attack may be immiment, said press reports in the Lebanese capital of Beirut. They said Assad plans to fly to Cairo no later than Monday for urgent consultations with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

In Damascus, the Syrian capital, the government newspaper Al Thawra said there might be "savage attacks" by the Israelis on both the Syrian and Egyptian fronts within the next few months. It said the attacks would be aimed at liquidating the Arab powers which the United States considered "obstacles to a peaceful settlement."

Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir, in an interview on the armed forces radio, said Israel is prepared for a resumption of hostilities. She said another Mideast war "might well come about" because Sadat is "in distress."

"He is in distress and history can testify that Arab leaders have been in distress on more than one occasion in the past. The simplest thing is go to war," Mrs. Meir said in an interview marking her 75th birthday May 3 and Israel's 25th anniversary May 7.

The French-language Beirut newspaper L'Orient-Le Jour cited Arab diplomatic sources as saying the Syrian government has received "information indicating that Israeli aggression is imminent."

It noted that Israel's radio had been playing up the capture of five Arab guerrillas in the occupied Golan Heights Thursday and claiming the infiltration was carried out "with the complete agreement of Damascus authorities."

Israel has warned it would hold Arab governments reponsible for guerrilla operations from their territory and has responded in the past with retaliatory strikes. Guerrilla attacks against Israelis abroad also have drawn Israeli military reprisals.

The latest such raid was the strike April 10 against Beirut in which Israeli commandos killed three top Palestinian guerrilla leaders in their homes following guerrilla attacks on the Israeli ambassador's residence on Cyprus and an Israeli airliner at the Nicosia airport.

Reports in Beirut said residents in south Lebanon already were worried about an increase in the overflights by Israeli warplanes. Palestinian guerrilla sources were quoted as saying they were anticipating an Israeli attack.

Meanwhile, in Tel Aviv, the Israeli Memorial to the Camp Dead organization said Saturday it has identified two Nazi extermination centers in Germany that were not included in the official list of wartime concentration camps.

The camps were located near Gotha and Gardelegen, in areas now within East Germany. The organization said little was known about the camps except that many Jews were gassed there and their bodies cremated.

Chaim Posner, a member of the executive board of the organization, said investigators learned of the camps through documents and photographs given to him three months ago by Otis Chandler, publisher of the Los Angeles Times.

Posner said the camps were not included on the list of extermination and labor camps such as Auschwitz, Treblinka, Dachau and others kept at the International Institute in Arolsen, Germany. The institute investigates and documents Nazi war crimes

The city of Gotha is 65 miles southwest of Berlin, and Gardelegen lies in the Thuringian forest, about 150 miles southwest of the East German capital.

Some of the 10 or 12 photographs of the camps that Posner received from Chandler showed Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, then supreme allied commander in Europe visiting the camps with some of his assistants, Posner said.

American troops entered the camps shortly after the German surrender in May, 1945, and one of the photographs showed a chimney still smoking above what was believed to be a crematorium.

Drug Bill Faces Tough Going

ALBANY, N.Y. (UPI)—Governor Rockefeller's anti - drug bill, which would mandate at least one year in jail for narcotics crimes but also boosts penalties up to life, faces extremely heavy going in the Assembly, according to Capitol sources.

The Senate Friday passed the measure, 41-14, following nearly five hours of debate in which even some senators who eventually voted in favor of the bill expressed reservations about alleged inconsistencies.

Rockefeller's proposal, aimed at getting drug pushers and addicts off the streets through the threat of mandatory jail time, is a modified form of his earlier "life - in - prison - without - parole" plan.

Unlike the original version, the bill approved by the Senate allows parole, but the parolee would remain under supervision for the rest of his life. The new proposal also allows plea bargaining, a process under which a person pleads guilty to a lesser charge in return for a lighter sentence. The practice is often used by prosecutors to obtain evidence about other suspects.

Gov. Rockefeller in rejecting bill aimed at delaying Adirondack Park Agency plan, said measure would have created "dangerous time gap." Story Page 2.

Opponents noted that under Rockefeller's plan, a person charged with the least severe of the three major categories of felonies would be unable to plead to a lesser count.

Because most of these persons would be relatively small-time or casual drug abusers, they argued, prosecutors would not be able to give them any incentive to testify against their suppliers and big-time drug pushers.

The sources said the bill faces rough sledding in the Assembly because Republican Assemblyman Dominick DiCarlo of Brooklyn, chairman of that house' Codes Committee, has proposed a rival plan.

It also would stiffen penalties but differs from Rockefeller's in permitting a wider latitude in plea bargaining.

In the Senate, the measure was presented by Sen. Douglas Barclay, R-Pulaski, chairman of the Codes Committee. Barclay agreed the bill was "not a nanacea" and that changes might be made later. He urged its passage, however, noting that "any bill of this magnitude can be nit-picked to death."

Sen. Joseph J. Pisani, R-New Rochelle, a supporter of the DiCarlo plan, introduced amendments to the Rockefeller bill calling for the death penalty in cases where witnesses in drug crimes were killed or when a person died as a result of drugs.

Both amendments were defeated. Pisani and Republican Senators Roy M. Goodman of Manhattan and Bernard C. Smith of Northport were the only GOP majority members to join 11 Democrats in voting against Rockefellers' bill.

In summing up debate, Sen. Jeremiah B. Bloom of Brooklyn, acting minority leader, urged a conference this weekend between the proponents of the various measures to work on possible amendments. Bloom, however, voted for the bill.

Senate Majority Leader Warren M. Anderson stoutly defended the measure in his summation and called it a composite bill representing the best efforts of the executive and legislative branches.

New York City leaders have opposed the measure on the ground it would overload the courts, and the Civil Liberties Union also has expressed opposition.

Even before the bill was formally brought up, Democrats attempted to delay action on it for more study, saying they had not had sufficient time to look at the measure, which was prepared while the legislature was in recess last week.

Did You Change Clock?

Grand Jury Action Possible In Col. Chandler Fatality

KINGSTON

Brian D. Smith, 38, of 112 Glen Street, stands accused of driving while intoxicated and faces possible grand jury action as a result of a fatal accident on the Col. Chandler Drive shortly before midnight Friday in which Raymond Houghtaling, 33, of 76 Grand Street was killed.

Smith, a two-term alderman from the third ward, appeared in city court on Saturday morning, entered a plea of innocent to the driving while intoxicated charge and had his case adjourned until May 12 by Special City Judge George A. Beck. Smith was released in the custody of his attorney, Joseph Hill. No bail was involved.

However, a spokesman from the Ulster County District Attorney's office told The Freeman Saturday afternoon that the case could wind up before the grand jury. "We usually refer DWI cases where a fatality is involved to the grand jury," the spokesman said.

The accident occurred at 11:34 p.m. Friday night on the Col. Chandler Drive just before the railroad overpass when Smith, reportedly heading north in a 1970 sedan allegedly sideswiped the left side of Houghtaling vehicle which was pulled off the road. Witnesses told The Freeman that driving conditions were adverse at the time of the accident, rain was falling, there was some fog and visibility was limited. In addition, the Houghtaling car was reportedly parked some three feet onto the road with all its lights out, according to police sources.

The victim was lying under the car, police reports said, attempting to make repairs. Two other men, Eltinge Houghtaling, 33, of Colonial Gardens, brother of the victim, and Eugene Matthews, 23, of the Stuyvesant Hotel were standing in the roadway when the accident occurred. They were also reportedly struck by the Smith vehicle, both suffering broken right legs. Both men are reported in fair condition at Benedictine Hospital.

All three men were rushed to Benedictine Hospital after the accident. Raymond Houghtaling died within minutes after arrival.

Ulster Coroner Richard Buono has reserved decision in the case pending an autopsy.

There were reportedly three women in the Houghtaling car at the time of the accident, Patricia Houghtaling, sister of Matthews and wife of Eltinge Houghtaling, Jennifer Orr and Caroline Kukuk. None of the women was injured.

The addresses of the women were not available.

Smith was alone in his car at the time of the accident which was investigated by Kingston Patrolmen James A. Brodhead and Barry Dunn. Detectives Leonard Ellsworth and Edward Ortlieb were also on the case.

River Threatens St. Louis

By United Press International

The Mississippi River rose toward a record crest at St. Louis Saturday and threatened new destruction south of the city.

Southward along the mighty river's length, residents continued to reinforce levees, hoping they would hold as the crest came downriver.

The Mississippi was measured at 43.2 feet at St. Louis Saturday morning and was expected to crest during the night at 43.5 feet, 17 inches above the record of 42.0 feet set in 1785. Flood stage at St. Louis is 30 feet.

Most of the city along the Mississippi was protected by 52-foot floodwalls, but backwaters from tributaries flooded residential areas inland. On the south side, backwaters forced the Des Peres River to overflow its banks through residential sections. Near Valley Parkn Mo., the Meremec River was about four feet over flood stage and was observed to be flowing upstream.

Nearly 40 per cent of St. Charles County, Missouri, near the confluence of the Missouri River with the Mississippi, was under water. An estimated 5,000 persons remained out of their homes there.

Bombs, Ammo Blow Up on Coast

ROSEVILLE, Calif. (UPI) — A string of boxcars loaded with 500 pound fragmentation bombs exploded Saturday one after another with ground-shaking blasts, forcing evacuation of families in a 10-square mile area and sending giant mushroom clouds of smoke billowing in the air.

The explosions, which started shortly after 8 a.m. continued for more than two hours. Windows in homes up to 2,000 yards from the Southern Pacific switching depot where the blasts occurred were shattered and huge balls of fire were visible five miles away.

Twenty-five injured persons were taken to Roseville Community Hospital. A spokesman said most had lacerations and concussions. Another nearby hospital said it had received a few persons with "very minor" injuries.

The Sacramento County coroner was called to the scene but there were no reports of deaths.

Southern Pacific (SP) headquarters in San Francisco said the train was made up of 21 boxcars loaded with bombs and ammunition en route from Hawthorne, Nev., to the Naval Weapons Station at Port Chicago, Calif., a shipping point for ammunition and explosives headed to the Far East.

Ronald Sixby, a Sacramento SP official, said an intense fire from the explosives had encompassed 100 other boxcars in the yard, the main SP freight depot in the west. He said there were up to 500 cars in the yard.

Sheriff's deputies evacuated homes in a wide radius of the yard after it was determined that other boxcars contained liquified gas and posed the danger of even more explosions.

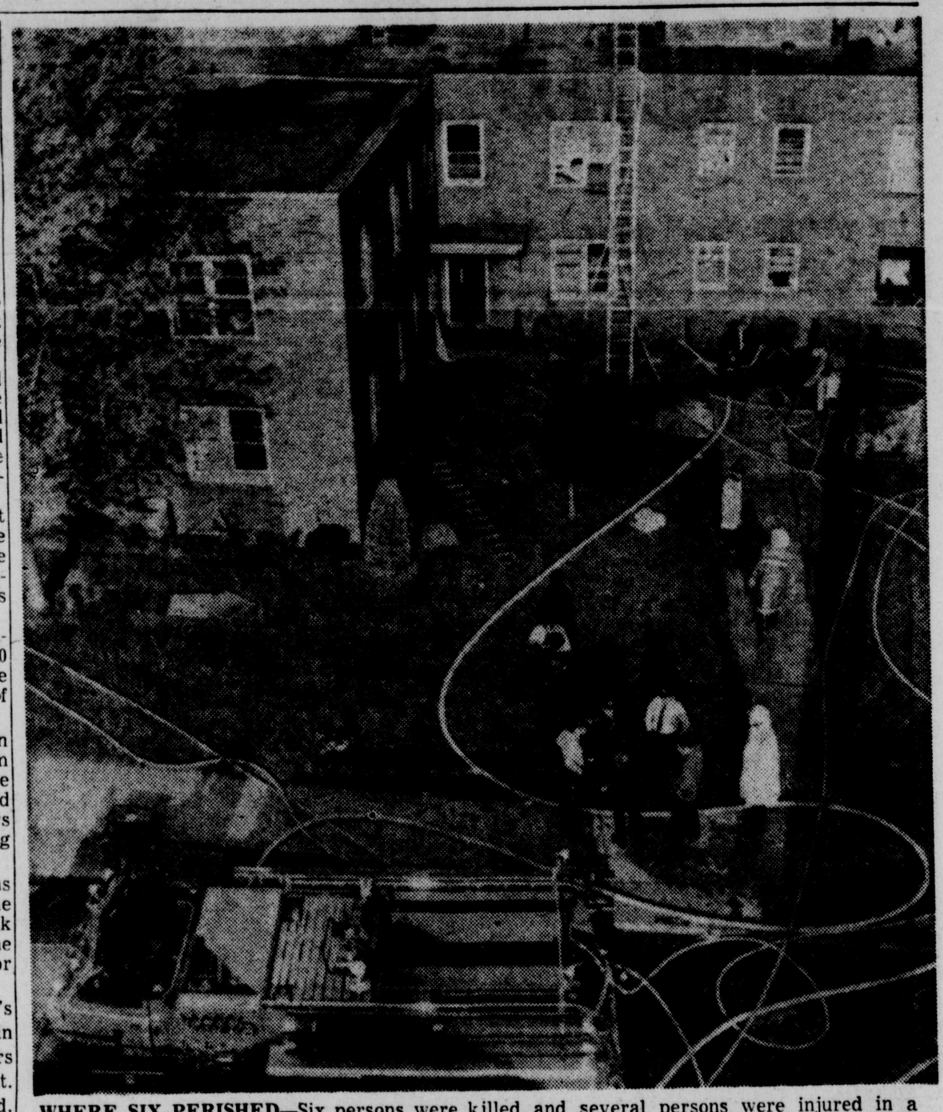
At a police command post four miles from the scene, one officer said: "There are some big eggs on that train, 500-pounders, and this is about as close as you want to get."

The California Highway Patrol closed the Interstate 80 highway, which passes near the yard, because of the force of the blasts.

UPI reporter David Jensen was calling in information from a home two miles from the scene when one of the repeated blasts knocked out the windows and he was forced to flee along with the occupants.

The ear-shattering explosions hurled chunks of hot metal one mile from the scene at the peak of the blasts and ripped the side paneling off a pizza parlor one mile away.

Bill Miller, a county sheriff's official, said he drove within 200 yards of the blazing boxcars when there was another blast. "It about blew us off the road, scared the hell out of us," he said.



WHERE SIX PERISHED—Six persons were killed and several persons were injured in a Saturday fire at a brick apartment building in Kansas City, Kansas. Fire officials suspect arson. An attempt was made to set fire to an adjacent building also. (UPI Telephoto)

Saigon, Cong Swap POWs

(Combined Wire Dispatches)

South Vietnam and the Viet Cong traded 163 civilian prisoners Saturday, the deadline day stipulated in the cease-fire agreement for the exchange that is supposed to involve 1,387 prisoners.

The exchange took place at Loc Ninh, a district capital controlled by the Communists 75 miles north of Saigon. The South Vietnamese handed over 100 prisoners in exchange for 63 from the Viet Cong.

Saturday was the 90th day since the cease-fire agreement became effective and was the deadline for all prisoners to be released, according to the Paris peace agreement. However, arrangements for the release of the balance of the civilians have not yet been worked out.

Saturday's exchange was one day behind schedule. It was delayed by a disagreement between the Communists and the international truce team over safety measures for truce team helicopters. Details of the agreement worked out between the International Commission on Control and Supervision (ICCS) and the Viet Cong were not revealed.

The prisoners released to the South Vietnamese were taken to camps and hospitals at Bien Hoa, 14 miles northeast of Saigon, where sources said they would undergo interrogation before being released to return home.

The Saigon government is scheduled to release 750 civilians and the Viet Cong Provisional Revolutionary Government is to release 637. Both sides claim the other holds many more civilians prisoner. The PRG claims the Saigon government holds 200,000 political prisoners and Saigon says the PRG holds 67,000.

Meanwhile in Cambodia, Cambodian navy gunboats landed a heavily armed assault group Saturday on the Mekong River's eastern shore two miles across from Phnom Penh to reinforce government troops fighting to retake the village of Arei Ksath, military sources reported.

The sources said the reinforcements, of undisclosed number, hit the shore under cover from Cambodian air force planes firing on antigovernment forces dug in along the bank. There was no immediate report of casualties.

For the first time in the four days since antigovernment forces made their presence known on the east bank across from the capital, no American warplanes were sighted.

Rocky on Adirondack Delay

Dangerous Gap

ALBANY, N.Y. (UPI)— As anticipated, Governor Rockefeller has vetoed a bill which would have delayed implementation of the Adirondack Park Agency's private land use plan for one year.

In a veto message Friday, Rockefeller said the delay measure would have created a "dangerous time - gap during which irreversible damage" could have been done to the 6-million acre Adirondack Park area by developers.

The measure, sponsored by several legislators from the affected area, would have postponed the zoning plan for some 3.7 million acres of privately-held park area lands until the 1974 legislative session.

One of the sponsors of the delay bill, Assemblyman Glen H. Harris, R—Canada Lake, said Friday night, "It goes without saying that I am very upset that the governor has decided to ignore the pleas of residents of the 12 Adirondack counties—especially when we had offered every possible safeguard to the Adirondack Park Agency."

"It must be assumed that the push will now be on to pass the legislation implementing the private land use plan," Harris said. Such legislation is before committees, and is expected to be acted on soon.

Harris said he could not support implementation measures, however, "unless and until some of the fiscal aspects of the plan have been given proper consideration, and until local government is given its proper role in project review."

He said he would do all he could to offer amendments to the implementation proposal.

The governor's veto came as no surprise, as he had consistently said since the Adirondack Park Agency submitted its land-use proposals last December that he would oppose any efforts to delay implementation of the plan.

Kremlin Shakeup . . . Domestic Policy Tightened

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

The latest Kremlin shakeup announced Friday points in the direction of a tightening and hardening of domestic policy. This would be defensive, against potential political dangers inherent in expanding relations with the United States.

Evidently there has been a contest going on in the Kremlin centering about the effects of foreign policy on the domestic front. If the party chief, Leonid I. Brezhnev, seems to have come out slightly ahead, he has at the same time been obliged to heed hardliner warnings to be supercareful in this detente with the Americans, that it doesn't progress too fast.

Brezhnev, though he had seemed to have complete, personal charge of foreign policy, nevertheless felt constrained to explain himself in a secret speech to the party Central Committee, just in advance of its announcement that two men have been fired from its ruling Politburo and three new faces added. Brezhnev's theme was "peaceful coexistence," a phrase that speaks volumes.

The two men fired from the Politburo, Pyotr Shelest and Gennady I. Voronov, had been in trouble for some time, Shelest for mismanagement of the Ukraine, Voronov evidently as a failure in running the People's Control Commission, charged with enforcing labor discipline nationwide.

Shelest was a hardliner and no loss to Brezhnev. Voronov's fall, however, can reflect impatience among the conservatives about the state of discipline among the working public.

Added to the now 16-member Politburo were Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, Defense Minister Andrei A. Grechko and Yuri V. Andropov, chief of the KGB, or secret police.

Analysis

At first glance, this seems to be in Brezhnev's favor. Marshal Grechko is regarded as at least a supporter, and Gromyko as a faithful carrier of policy. The elevation of 63-year-old Gromyko might, in fact, be read as simply a long overdue honor. But there are other sides to these things.

When Gromyko was apart from the Politburo, simply a foreign minister and messenger, he could be regarded as the instrument of the top man — in this case, Brezhnev. But with Gromyko a member of the top ruling body of the party, there is a suggestion that the whole Politburo, and not just Brezhnev alone, has responsibility for policy making.

The additions of Grechko and Andropov to the Politburo add military and police representation there for the first time in many years and that makes the political influence of the two branches notably visible.

The military brass has been traditionally conservative. Influential elements in it tends to support the hidebound people who, while they might have deplored Stalin's bloodiest excesses, had little quarrel with his system of running a dictatorship. Also, the military is jealous of its privileges and defensive of its huge appetite for the nation's resources to maintain enormous installations and equipment.

Brezhnev wants a period of freedom from major world crisis and high tension so he can attend to building up the consumer economy. Possibly some in authority think he is taking too many risks. For some time now there have been signs of strain emanating from the new posture toward the United States.

Hoffa Discounts 'Bug' Ties

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Teamsters boss James R. Hoffa said Saturday that President Nixon probably was and unknowing "victim of circumstances" in the Watergate scandal and discounted possible Teamster involvement in financing the bugging.

"I sat at 25 Louisiana Avenue (Teamster national headquarters here) long enough to know that I couldn't keep track of everything that went on in the union," Hoffa told a news conference, "and I'm sure President Nixon couldn't either."

"It's probably better than the latest fiction book on who did it," Hoffa said of the bugging affair. "It seems there must have been quite a group of actors involved in a pretty amateurish sort of operation. I hope everything else isn't run the same way."

Hoffa, who backed Nixon's re-election last year, met with reporters before attending a $100-a-plate dinner arranged by the National Association for Justice (NAJ) to honor him for his prison reform efforts since being paroled from a federal penitentiary in 1971.

Proceeds were to be used to finance a "crisis control center" designed to help ease tensions in prisons and prevent disturbances in them. NAJ officials said toll-free "hot lines" would be set up to that any inmates, prison guards or officials could contact the center for aid or to report potential trouble.

Hoffa, questioned at the news conference about a published report that money was diverted from the Teamster pension fund to help carry out the Watergate operation, replied "I just don't believe it."

And Ellsberg Wonders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Daniel Ellsberg says a newly reported link between Watergate conspirators and his trial has convinced him that the Pentagon papers prosecution was related to efforts to re-elect President Nixon.

"I've never spoken of this as a political trial. But now I'm beginning to wonder," said Ellsberg in an interview. He spoke in the aftermath of the courtroom announcement that G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt are suspected of burglarizing the office of Ellsbergs' psychiatrist to get Ellsberg's files.

The 42-year-old Ellsberg, on trial with Anthony Russo for espionage, conspiracy and theft in connection with the copying of the top secret papers in 1969, cited other suspected efforts by the Nixon backers to portray him as 'traitor."

Time Key Factor in Grand Union Issue

GRAND UNION TIME—For awhile, we didn't think the Grand Union issue would come back to haunt the Koenig Administration, although that opinion was against our better political judgments.

We talked to Jack St. John, attorney for St. Ann's, and we talked to some of the people from St. Anne's and the indication, early this year, was that they'd like to bring it back but in no case would they bring it back without a good chance of final pasage "Final passage" translates into nine votes in the Common Council, or enough to override a mayoral veto.

Most will recall the mayor's threats to veto Council legislation on Grand Union last year for the expressed and often stated reason that a supermarket at the St. Anne's location on Broadway half a mile from Broadway East, would put the proposed City Hall Plaza in "serious jeopardy." Koenig made good on the threat, the legislation was vetoed and a move to override his (actually Bob Gallo's) veto fell short by just a single vote.

Earlier this year, the situation was pretty much the same as it had been when the Council last met on Grand Union, which is to say, the beginning of May of last year.

Things still seemed "promising" for City Hall Plaza —the word "hope" was thrown around quite a bit—and though there was precious little word from city hall, it still looked like the project might get started this summer.

"Letters of intent" had been signed with a major supermarket and all that remained was the financing of some $250,000 in equipment and supplies—a mere pittance in a $2 million project—to get the thing off the ground.

City Beat

By HUGH REYNOLDS
Freeman City Hall Reporter

But then, a few days before leaving for his Florida vacation, the mayor announced that the original developer would not be able to carry out his plans. The developer was committed to several projects in the Albany area and wouldn't be able to get to Kingston until maybe next year. Maybe. The mayor, not one to give up easily, then announced that he had another—unnamed, of course—developer interested in Broadway East who might be enticed into building down there this year. Maybe.

Within a week, the Grand Union proposal was back in the Council and we'd say it was a prime example of cause and effect.

The mayor won last year, by the narrowest of margins, because of two main reasons: time and a developer on his side. He has neither, now. The argument for time —"give us time to develop Broadway East"—will be much less forceful since over a year has gone by with no development. And at this point in time there is no clearly identified developer, just a vague promise of "interest."

Koenig will have to put together something solid very quickly in the way of a developer. "Time," if it hasn't already, is running out.

SHADES OF RAY—Dick Schermerhorn, Kingston's representative in the New York State Senate, has never been known as a shrinking violet. Schermerhorn can usually be found where the action is, usually as a catalyst.

The latest word on Schermerhorn is that he intends to take U.S. Senator Jaccob K. Javits to a Republican primary next year. And Schermerhorn has let it be known that he has something like a million dollars promised to him from various as yet unnamed sources. A million dollars in a Senate campaign might just last a week.

But, Schermerhorn, who spared no expense in his own senatorial campaign, is adamant. "If Jack Kemp doesn't go, I'm ready," the Senator told us last week. (Jack Kemp? Wasn't he the guy who used to quarterback for the Buffalo Bills football team? Yes indeed. He's now a congressman, a conservative congressman, from the same area.)

We humorously suggested to Schermerhorn—who fortunately, has a sense of humor—that he, Schermerhorn, might be playing the thing for effect, in the inimitable fashion of Ray Garraghan, former mayor of Kingston and erstwhile gubernatorial candidate.

"Ray Garraghan?" said the Senator, "I heard about him."

"Well, did you ever hear about the time he ran against Rocky?" we asked.

"No kidding," responded the Senator, his interest obviously piqued.

"Oh, sure," we answered. "Ray announced one day right out of the blue, that he was running against Rocky. Caused quite a flurry. TV crews from Albany and all that. One guy asked Ray what he thought his chances were. 'Beat him in a walk,' said Ray."

Schermerhorn enjoyed the story but we think he might have missed the point. "He's vulnerable in a primary," Schermerhorn insisted referring to Javits. "We've got a lot of support, a lot of people are fed up with him, especially upstate and if we can get those people together we can . . . . . "

POSTAL WEEK IN KINGSTON — Oscar V. Newkirk (L) Kingston postmaster, receives the proclamation of postal week from Acting Mayor T. Kirschner Named Chairman Of S-A Capital Fund Drive

KINGSTON — Businessman and Ulster County Legislator Lewis Kirschner of 190 Rogers Street, Port Ewen, has been named Salvation Army Building Program Capital Fund general chairman by the S. A. Board of Directors.

A new $277,000 Ulster County Headquarters is now under construction on Cedar Street to replace the present facility at 94 North Front Street, soon to be demolished by Kingston Urban Renewal.

"My first contact with the Salvation Army was during the floods of 1955," says Kirschner, "and, while my family was not directly affected, I will nonethe-less never forget how the Salvation Army people turned out with food, clothing, and offers of shelter for all who suffered losses." "They did so much for countless numbers of my friends and neighbors, while asking for nothing in return — not during the time of need, or afterward," Kirschner stated. Concluding he asked himself, "Why did I accept the general chairmanship? Simple. The Salvation Army has been working for all of us in Ulster County for the past 75 years, and asked for near nothing in return. They are being forced out of their North Front Street home because of expanding community activities, by the fact their present building is falling down around them, and Urban Renewal is soon to level the property. The time was never more urgent than now for all of us to give the Salvation Army some unselfish help in return for past good deeds, and so they can continue with their unselfish community service."

Details of the fund campaign, and introduction of individual campaign division chairman will take place at a special press conference Wednesday May 2, at the North Front Street Salvation Army Headquarters.

Kirschner is married and the father of two boys. As for other community involvement he is a member of the Town of Esopus Lions Club, is deputy district governor of Lions International, serves on the board of directors of the Town of Esopus Little League, is on the board of the Children's Rehabilitation Center and the Salvation Army. He is immediate past president of the Ulster County Supervisors and Legislators Association. He is also a member of the Port Ewen Fire Department, and the Ulster County Chamber of Commerce. In addition he is a member of Temple Emanuel and the B'nai B'rith.

A Dressing Up for Postal Week

KINGSTON — The main Kingston Post Office will be dressed up April 30-May 5 to help celebrate "Postal Week," as proclaimed by Acting Mayor T. Robert Gallo.

Postmaster Oscar V. Newkirk disclosed that customers attending the Kingston "Postal People Day" observance at the post office April 30 will be given attractive free souvenir envelopes.

Ceremonies will be held April 30 for issuance of a new set of 10 eight cent stamps honoring the two-thirds of a million postal workers across the nation, including the 160 that work in Kingston.

Newkirk is dressing up the post office with displays to provide a festive and hospitable background inside an outside the lobby, and streams, bunting and flags will be displayed.

The souvenir envelopes, to be available in a limited quantity, will be imprinted or "cacheted." And a quantity of cacheted envelopes will be prepared in advance bearing all 10 Postal People stamps.

These "first day covers," as they are known to collectors, will be postmarked by hand with the local postmark and will be sold for the cash value, 80 cents, while they last.

Ceremonies planned for the Main Post Office, 90 Cornell Street, will include a ribbon-cutting by Acting Mayor Gallo. Tuesday night has been set aside for the Lions Club; Wednesday night for Rotary Club members and Thursday night for Kiwanis Club.

Ladies Day, with tours and refreshments, will be held from 1-5 p.m., Wednesday. A postal employe will be availble at the Self-Service Postal Unit to explain its operation Monday through Friday.

18 to Review MTA Master Plan

Pattern Group on Stewart Airport

KINGSTON — The formation of a special Stewart (Airport) Evaluation Committee by Mid-Hudson Pattern for Progress to review the recently released master plan by the MTA has been announced by Howard C. St. John, chairman of Pattern's board of directors.

St. John said the committee will include 18 members from Ulster, Orange and Dutchess Counties who "will represent a variety of viewpoints on the Stewart Airport Issue."

"The Pattern-established citizens committee," St. John said, "will work closely with Pattern's professional staff to evaluate the Stewart master plan with a view toward helping Pattern take a public position in the immediate months ahead."

Pattern for Progress, a regional planning, research and development corporation, was the first organization to study in-depth the potential economic and environmental impact from an expanded facility at Stewart Airport. That study — "The Future of Stewart Airport" — later received a first prize award from the Governmental Research Association of America.

Members of the Stewart Evaluation Committee from Ulster County will include Dr. George B. Erbstein, president of Ulster County Community College; Dr. David Mesches, chairman of the Ulster County Planning Board; Dr. Robert C. Davidson, professor at the State University College at New Paltz and Garry Hepworth, owner of Hepworth Farms in Milton.

Dutchess County members of the committee include Earl Bruno, majority leader of the Dutchess County Board of Representatives; Lionel Frank of the firm of Frank and Bolton Inc. of Beacon; Leslie J. Rollins, Dutchess Farm Extension agent; Eugene Smith, manager of Nabisco in Beacon and Scott Warthin Jr., professor emeritus at Vassar College in Poughkeepsie.

The Orange County delegation includes George Aldsdorf, vice president of E. S. Panarello & Associates Inc.; Harvey Burger, president of the Newburgh Chapter of the NAACP; Raymond Catania, past president of the Greater Newburgh Chamber of Commerce; Grey Gooby, adminstrator at St. Luke"s Hospital and Julius Larkin Hoyt, an Orange County legislator, all from Newburgh in addition to Theodore Marsden, supervisor of the Town of New Windsor, Eugene Morrison, chairman of the board of the Orange County Trust Company; George Smith, general manager of the Nepera Chemical Co. of Harriman and John Stillman, an attorney from Cornwall-on-Hudson.

Mental Health Lists Speaker

KINGSTON — Dr. George Joseph will be the speaker at the annual meeting of the Ulster County Association for Mental Health, Thursday, May 3. He will discuss the present and future plans for mental health services in Ulster County.

As the responsible official for community mental health services, Dr. Joseph is charged by the Ulster County Legislature with carrying out the requirements of the New York State Mental Hygiene Law. This covers a wide range of services, and includes those under contract by the local Association for Retarded Children, the Benedictine Hospital, Gateway Industries, Southern Ulster Mental Health Clinic, Ulster County Association for Mental Health, as well as the Mental Health Out-Patient Clinic and Day Hospital at 400 Broadway, Kingston.

The dinner meeting will be at Roberto's Restaurant, Port Ewen. Advance reservation is necessary. Information is available by contacting UCAMH, 27 East O'Reilly Street.

Development OK Due in Rosendale

ROSENDALE — It is anticipated that the Town of Rosendale Planning Board will approve a request for a housing development on property located on the southeast corner of the juncture of Lucas Avenue Extension and Cottekill Road.

Planning Board Chairman Theodore Musal told The Freeman that no official decision was reached on the application following a recent ublic hearing, and he expected the decision will be available in about one week.

He stated that the majority of those present at the hearing appeared to be in favor of the 26-lot "Country Village Estates" proposed by Kingston builder Pat Simmons.

The only major point of contention among the approximately 20 persons present centered on an adjoining lot in the residentially zoned section of the town that was not really included in the hearing.

Simmons has tentatively stated that he would like the adjoining property zoned commercial at some future date for an as yet undetermined use, and that would have to be the subject of another public hearing, noted Musal.

A description of Country Village Estates as put forth by the potential developer would have single family housing in the $30,000 to $45,000 price range, all on a plot at least a half acre in size.

A map of the proposed development is available for perusal at the Rosendale Town Clerk's office.

Israel's Golda Speaks Of the Past and Future

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Prime Minister Golda Meir said today Israel's primary goal in its second quarter century will be the same as in the first—to convince the Arabs that it is here to stay and cannot be defeated.

She said in an interview marking the nation's 25th anniversary that the greatest achievement had been its mere survival. The second: The ingathering of 1.2 million Jews to a homeland free from discrimination and fear.

"The only thing that hasn't changed," she said, "is that we have no peace with our neighbors. And this, of course, is an extremely important thing, too, not just a small item...

"We begin the next 25 years with the same aspiration that we had in the last 25 years. That is, how do we get our neighbors to realize that fighting won't solve anything? If their purpose is to drive us out of this area, they might as well give it up.

"We're here to stay just the same as Egypt is here to stay and Lebanon is here to stay, and they must recognize that we have the same right to be here as they have."

Is that acceptance any closer now than a quarter century ago?

"The very fact that we've been here for 25 years puts us a little closer. They certainly had more reason to believe that they could throw us out in 1948 than they can now."

At 74, Mrs. Meir is the strength of Israel personified. She gave up her school-teaching job in Milwaukee, Wis., 52 years ago to bring to Palestine a Zionistic ideal rooted in her mother Russia and memories of pogroms there. It wrecked her marriage.

From a farm worker, she rose to represent Israel in the Soviet Union, in the United Nations, as foreign minister and finally, beginning in 1969, as prime minister.

She is a tough, tireless and demanding taskmaster who puts in up to 20 hours a day and orders exhausted male aides home to bed before she turns in herself. Whether she will seek re-election in this fall's elections is the subject of nationwide debate.

"I'll decide in a couple of months" she said. "Some people I like to keep guessing. I always say to those who don't want to see me go, why should I cause them sorrow? Those that want to see me go, I don't mind if they worry about it."

People around the world love her as their grandmother or despise her as a hardnosed manipulator of power politics.

With pictures of herself with Pope Paul, President Nixon and New York City Mayor John V. Lindsay in the bookcase behind her, Mrs. Meir sat in the straight-backed leather swivel chair behind her wooden desk and recalled the creation of Israel on May 14, 1948.

"Even when we declared ourselves independent, we didn't have a moment of time to think what we are going to do except one thing—how do we remain alive and in that way keep Israel alive," she said, "because only a few hours later, we were attacked by seven well-armed Arab armies."

"We were there empty handed ... and I must say, looking back, I can't quite understand rationally how we were so sure that we would win.

"And immediately after that, the really great dream would come true. That was a large mass of immigration into Israel... now you see Israel. Instead of 650,000, we are close to three million. We've received into Israel and absorbed 1.2 million Jews from all over the world, most of them from Arab countries."

She spoke of today's agricultural exports, industrialization, schools, hospitals, the battle against illiteracy and disease among immigrants who came with only the clothes on their backs from such places as Iraq and Yemen. Arrivals from the Soviet Union are close to her heart.

The price of vigilance on the battlefield has had its effect. Not everything in Israel is milk and honey, not everyone is happy. Voices are being raised. High prices, high taxes, inflation, etc.

"There are still here and there groups of people whose housing is not adequate enough and who are still lacking in many things that they would have had if we had enjoyed peace throughout the years," Mrs. Meir said.

Peace to her means sharing.

"We would like to live and work in full cooperation with our neighbors for the development of this entire area," she said. "We believe we have something to contribute to the development of lands that are underdeveloped, and we would do it with joy...

Speaking of Egypt she said, "How can the leaders, the government, sit back and talk about war, about sacrificing a million, two million, three million people? For what? Just for the glory of destroying somebody else? It doesn't pay for them to try to destroy us ... Its' too great of an expense for them to carry if they worry about their people."

She reasserted Israel's willingness to give back some—but certainly not all—of the occupied territories, but within the limits of Israeli security, and in negotiations.

"They (the Arabs) can't dictate to us. They say to us that since we (the Arabs) wanted to destroy you in 1967 and didn't succeed, go back to the (prewar) line and maybe next time. And when we say no to this, then we have a bad image in the world. I don't understand why."

Describing her burden of responsibility as "an impossible one," she said "I hope and pray that one of two things will not happen to me:

"That I will not say no (to a settlement) when maybe it would have been better to say yes, or that I will not be so weakened to say yes when no is necessary for the security of my people."

Yes, she said, her people were stubborn and inflexible, for they had to be.

Golda Meir leaned back in her chair and closed her eyes a moment. Her voice grew strained, tired.

"I'm here for more than 50 years," she said. "My children were born here. My grandchildren were born here. I have two generations here, and we've seen something happen, contributed a little bit to it.

"My children, my grandchildren. I also did a little bit. Nothing else to worry about, to wish for."

Reunion in San Francisco For POWs and Commandos

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Americans who were imprisoned at Son Tay were united here this weekend with the U.S. commandos who dropped from the sky at night over North Vietnam 2½ years ago in a futile attempt to rescue them.

Nearly all of the more than 200 invited guests were here for a two-day party, but the Texas billionaire who is picking up the tab was host in absentia, an aide said.

Tom Meurer, who coordinated the reunion for computer magnate H. Ross Perot, said 59 of the 66 Son Tay prisoners had accepted invitations and 74 of the 85 raiders promised to be on hand.

Perot paid for airplane tickets, hotel accomodations for the men and their wives and other expenses at a cost Meurer said could be "between $100,000 and $200,000."

But Perot didn't plan to attend because "he wanted the POWs and the raiders to have the publicity," Meurer said.

The daring helicopter raid Nov. 21, 1970, on Son Tay prison camp, 25 miles from Hanoi, came too late — the American prisoners had been moved four months earlier.

But retired Army Col. Arthur B. "Bull" Simons, who led the raid and who participated in the reunion here, said, "If the chance was one in 10 of getting the men out, it was worth it. It was something every one of those men wanted to do very badly."

Navy Cmdr. Render Crayton, senior commander at Son Tay after he was shot down in February 1966, said the commando raid "gave everybody a tremendous morale boost" when they learned about it from one of the raiders who was captured."

Crayton said the POWs' desire to meet the would-be rescuers was something "we talked about a lot."

The festivities began at noon Friday with a ticker tape parade in the city's financial district, followed by a luncheon at which John Wayne, star of the movie, "The Green Berets" spoke.

For dinner entertainment Friday night, comedian Red Skelton, actor Clint Eastwood and the Andrews Sisters singing trio performed, Meurer said. More entertainment came at midnight Friday with a show featuring the singing group The Supremes.

Saturday was set aside for visiting and sightseeing, including a two-hour sunset cruise on San Francisco Bay.

Nixon Dips Again

During a period of growing public concern over the Watergate affair, President Nixon's popularity has suffered a steady decline and is now down 14 points from a high point in late January following the Vietnam peace settlement.

The latest survey, completed prior to Nixon's recent announcement that "major developments" had come to light in the Watergate case, shows 54 per cent of Americans approving of the way he is handling his job, 36 per cent disapproving and 10 per cent undecided.

The previous survey, conducted only a week earlier (March 30-April 2), showed Nixon with a 59 per cent approval rate.

While Watergate appears to be an important factor in the President's declining popularity, others can also be cited—for example, concern over high prices. Some decline, however, could be expected with the Vietnam peace settlement now less prominent in people's thinking and the nation's attention focusing on domestic problems.

As reported Sunday, Watergate has developed into an issue which is familiar to an extraordinary number of Americans, 83 per cent. Nearly one-third of all persons in the latest survey think the Watergate affair reveals corruption in the Nixon administration. Furthermore, four persons in ten express the belief that President Nixon knew about the Watergate situation in advance.

A significant relationship is found between attitudes on Nixons' handling of his job and attitudes on Watergate.

Among persons who approve of Nixon's overall performance in office, opinion is 4-to-1 on the side that the Watergate affair is "just politics — the kind of thing that both parties engage in."

In sharp contrast, among those who disapprove of the way Nixon is handling his job, opinion is 5-to-2 on the side that Watergate is a serious matter, revealing corruption in the Nixon administration.

Evidence that Watergate could spell serious trouble for the GOP in the congressional races next year is shown by the fact that, not only 4 in 10 Democrats, but as many as one-third of independents think Watergate is a serious matter, revealing corruption in the Nixon administration. Thirteen per cent of Republicans share this view.

In light of these findings, it is interesting to note that President Nixon's popularity rating is down 16 points among independents since January, 13 points among Democrats and 6 points among his fellow Republicans.

The findings reported today are based on interviews with a total of 1,528 adults, 18 and older, interviewed in person in more than 300 scientifically selected localities during the period April 6-9.

Better Never Than Not Late

By ROBERT YOAKUM

A year ago no one thought mail delivery in the United States could get worse, but it did. Even the postmaster general, Elmer Klassen, admits that things have "deteriorated seriously."

As a matter of fact, the government may be forced to make peace with the American Indians so that they can employ some experienced smoke signal senders. But that wouldn't solve the problem of packages or letters with enclosures. One thing is clear: You'd better do your Christmas mailing early — not later than July 4.

Stories of long delivery delays are common. A Long Island banker received a letter containing $77,000 in checks six weeks after it was mailed. In New York City one letter took five days to go 14 blocks, which is a lot slower than the common garden snail (Helix aspersa), who, when humping along at all-out speed, has been clocked at .0313 m.p.h., or 165 feet in an hour.

What we don't read in the papers, though, are the thousands of misfortunes and tragedies that result from slower-than-snail mail. Let's imagine some examples:

The following letter, which arrived one week late, was returned with "Unclaimed" stamped on the envelope and the word "deceased" written after it:

"Dearest George,

"I must write this in haste, love, because I am being watched like a prisoner. Bill suspects something and I'm sure he's having me followed by a private detective whenever I leave the building. I'm even afraid to use the phone because he may have it tapped.

"WHATEVER YOU DO, DARLING, DO NOT TRY TO MEET ME AT THE USUAL TIME AND PLACE! HE MAY GO THERE HIMSELF AND, AS YOU KNOW, HE IS INSANELY JEALOUS. THERE IS NOTHING HE WOULDN'T DO!

"All my love, Amanda."

And a delay in the delivery of the following letter could also have fatal consequences:

"Dear Warden:

"Knowing how much you oppose the death penalty, I am sure you will be pleased to see the enclosed official order commuting Raphael Schultz' sentence to life imprisonment. New evidence has turned up in this case that will undoubtedly result in a retrial, and, quite possible and acquittal.

"Yours sincerely,
Gov. Mason R. Reams"

Or imagine the consequences of a delay in the following exchange. The second letter, like the one above, was returned marked "Unclaimed; deceased."

"Dear Sir:

"The man with whom I talked on the telephone at your office said it sounded as though I had been bitten by a rabbit. It was definitely not a rabbit. The thing that bit me in the neck looked more like a bat. Rabbits are bigger and don't fly. I've decided to wait for my doctor to return from his vacation and take it up with him.

"Sincerely,
Melba Peachman."

"Dear Madam:

"We have been trying desperately to reach you by telephone, but there has been no reply. What we told you was that it sounded as though the animal 'was rabid' (in other words, had rabies), not that it was a rabbit.

"Since the animal cannot be examined, it is essential for you to begin a three-week series of innoculatiohs immediately. Please confirm receipt of this letter by return mail.

"Sincerely,
A. M. Pasture, M.D."

Not many delayed letters have fatal results, of course. There are many more like the following:

"Dear Mr. Holden:

"We have carried out your instruction to sell 5,000 shares of Imperial Gas and Pewter at Market value, which was 23 on the day your letter arrived.

Incidentally, the price when your letter was written, eight days earlier, was 98.

"Sincerely,
Orfus B. Futures."

Or this one:

"Panamanian Airways

"Dear Sirs:

"Thank you for your letter of March 8 notifying me of the arrival of a salmon sent from Norway by Mr. and Mrs. Guihrie. The notification, which, ironically, contained the words 'Urgent: Perishable product!' arrived today, May 23. Please send (if anyone can get near it now) to the following address, with my compliments:

Letters to the Editor

Historic Kingston

Editor, The Freeman:

Having the radio alarm-clock set to dawn with the morning news is a form of anticipating a brighter day. Monday morning, April 16, a news broadcast announcing Fred Johnson, Betty Donnaruma and Harry Thayer had resigned from the Historic Preservation Commission created was — as I spelled it — a state of mourning.

Like yourselves my inquiries of the past few days have only disclosed many views on the situation without regard to a significant remedy. I can't understand why the Jacubus Bruyn house at the corner of Crown and North Front Street was scraped and the Hoffman house adjacent to the Salvation Army building, which an April shower might bring tumbling down, is in store for restoration. No — it was not the decision of the commission. There are plans for the Tremper House across from the Senate House to be converted to a Fine Arts Museum (what the Post Office should have been), but the Tremper House will now, undoubtedly, have an obituary too. The planning for the new city hall did include turning the site of the old city hall into a parking facility. But, things are now always as pre-planned and it was suggested the City give this plan further consideration. KHS may be able to utilize the builing as an art training center, a library, or a student government building. Or maybe man has become secondary to the machine and we should have the parking facility.

Historic Kingston, New York; the majority of us living here take our home for granted, but, in my trans-America travels this past summer many folks were awed by Kingston's historic significance related to the building of our country.

The point that I am getting at is that if we as a community permit Fred Johnson, Betty Donnaruma, and Harry Thayer to remain resigned from this commission, the umbilicle cord not only to our historic past is going to be severed but also to an era that was built upon a high moral attitude when people had a common bond and there work was toil and everything was done with T.L.C. Maybe we can't save the city hall, maybe the cost is too great to refurbish it, maybe its more important to have the parking facilities, life is full of maybe's. There are many other sights in Kingston in want of some attention. These people have the knowledge and we, the city, have need of them. But we have not demonstrated that need. The Trees on B'way are about to bloom — This commissions enthusiasm seeked out the 'concerned' people to donate them. No praise was given, no old-fashioned block-party at Academy Green in honor of the new foliage. Somehow I feel that the lack of complimenting caused many of those trees to be plucked by youth that were forgotten to be complimented instead of constantly being repremanded.

The other people on this commission are litterly drained of their enthusiasm too and only we as a community can revitalize that spirit. It is no longer JUST the Historic Commissions concern or JUST the City Councils duty, but ours as a community and who knows maybe people will absent-mindledly again retain their litter until they reach the litter basket. One is directly related to the other.

This commission is an essential part of our community and somehow MUST BE SAVED . . .

Thank you,
PHILIP GURRIERI

Onteora Meeting

Editor, The Freeman:

Carl Graham's article in last Thursday's Freeman entitled "Discipline Major Topic at 'Night' ", about Onteora Board Candidates, is inaccurate regarding the positions stated by at least two of those candidates, Howard Lewis and Rudy Hopkins. I was at the meeting, and made an audio tape of the entire presentation.

Howard Lewis, for instance, is quoted in Graham's article, as saying "discipline was (his) primary concern as a canddiate . . .". In fact, Lewis said no such thing. What he did say was "Youngsters learn best in an atmosphere of order and stability." That's not the same, obviously, as saying, in effect, that discipline comes first.

Rudy Hopkins is quoted in the following way: "He called for elimination of suspension as a disciplinary measure and called for abolition of the pass system." Now, while Mr. Hopkins did say approximately that, I think it's unfair of Mr. Graham to omit Mr. Hopkins' reasons for his point of view.

Surely, Mr. Graham must realize abolishing the pass system in schools is fairly controversial; it should not be reported as if that proposal existed in a vacuum. There are good reasons for such a proposal; Mr. Graham should have included them in his article.

Mr. Hopkins pointed out, for instance, that a student who is suspended from school is no longer an active member of the school community, and therefore cannot be helped or guided by the school. He did add that a student who was in some way threatening or dangerous to the school community should be subject to suspension. As for the pass system, Mr. Hopkins stated that it breeds distrust and is unworkable. "Honest" students will go where they're supposed to anyway; "dishonest" students will get around it.

As a teacher in the Onteora High School, I agree with Mr. Hopkins' views.

Sincerely,
DON LOPRIENO

Chairman

Peace Committee
Sir:

Your letter to the Editor Published in The Kingston Freeman dated April 24, 1973 is without a doubt the most idiotic piece of writing I ever read.

If sir this country is such a bad place, such a "stupid and gullible" place, may I ask what in hell are you doing here besides creating the hate and discontent to which you and your kind are assigned to do!

LOVE IT OR LEAVE IT MISTER! And I can't help but feel we would be much better off if you and your kind would leave it.

New Atlantic Charter

History will record Dr. Henry Kissinger as the architect of the Vietnam cease-fire. This does not mean his role as presidential aide and advisor has ended as was evidenced by his appearance this week at the annual meeting in New York of The Associated Press.

President Nixon is preparing for a grand tour of Europe later this year and it was plain that the President, through Dr. Kissinger, was warning his European allies that they must compromise on economic and trade battles to avoid endangering political and military unity.

At the same time, the Kissinger address could be interpreted as tending to mollify critics at home of the Nixon foreign policy.

Announcement, for example, of the imminent closing of military bases as economy moves has served to revive the question of the necessity of all our installations abroad.

There was more than a hint in the talk to the AP executives that U. S. military involvement in Europe might be diminished. Always the diplomat, Dr. Kissinger reiterated U. S. pledges to keep strong forces on European soil but at the same time indicated that support would lessen when East-West tension lessened.

This was revealed in his announcement that within the next few weeks the United States would present to NATO the "product of our own preparation for negotiations with the Communist forces on mutual balanced force reductions to begin this year."

But the most important aspect of the presidential aide's speech was his enunciation of growing American impatience with the attitudes of some of our allies. He warned ,for instance, that it is the responsibility of national leaders to ensure that economic negotiations serve larger political purposes. If carried on without restraint, he suggested, economic rivalry will in the end damage other relationships.

This was an allusion not only to the rivalry existing among European nations but to the economic problems that have arisen between the U. S. and the Common Market.

Additionally, with the energy crisis affecting Europe as well as this country, there is a need for cooperation in working out common problems.

Also significant was his observation that some of our friends in Europe have seemed unwilling to accord America the same trust in our motives as they received from us.

The message is clear.

Dr. Kissinger has told Europe: stop taking us for granted, assume a fairer share of the continent's defense and show an understanding of Washington's problems.

Dr. Kissinger paved the way for the President's enormously successful journeys last year to Peking and Moscow.

His outline of a new Atlantic charter could have a similar sequal this year. The heads of state in Europe will show where the President stands when he makes his grand tour.

Seat Belts Compulsory

Drivers are going to have to wear seat belts for any length trip, if federal plans for 1974 model cars are put into effect. The Department of Transportation has decided to require manufacturers to produce automobiles that will not run unless front seat occupants have fastened their seat belts.

The safety standard is called a "starter-restraint system interlock." The agency is putting it into effect as of August 15, despite contrary recommendations by several manufacturers and by the Motor Vehicle Advisory Council.

The regulation calls for nondetachable lap-and-shoulder belt combination that must be buckled, once the two front-seat occupants have sat down, or the starter will not work. There are 1973 cars that sound an alarm when the seat belt is not fastened, but it does not prevent the car from moving or continuing to move.

Auto makers object that the intricate design could cause a significant number of malfunctions, public inconvenience and aggravation, and prompt car owners to have the interlock disconnected. Perhaps, but the agency replies that benefits to be gained—the saving of lives in accidents—from increased belt usage — outweigh the costs and the possibility of malfunction.

Very true, but all car manufacturers should be required to make seat belts easier to buckle and long enough for those weighing over 200 pounds.

Washington Merry-Go-Round

Crosspurposes at Wounded Knee

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — The bureaucratic build-up outside Wounded Knee is a testament to the government's way of doing things. No less than 400 federal officials have descended upon the small South Dakota village to negotiate, mediate, consult and occasionally exchange gunfire with the Indian occupiers. Cost to the taxpayers: Around $2.7 million.

Yet at this writing, the Indians remain armed and angry.

Take the problem of roadblocks, for example. The daily crisis reports from Wounded Knee, intended for Justice Department eyes only, tell how armed local residents threw up their own vigilante roadblock. Assistant Attorney General J. Sanley Pottinger "met with them at the roadblock shortly after it was established but failed to talk it down," declares a crisis report.

Next day, the vigilante group refused to allow the Community Relations Service's peace-keeping team into Wounded Knee. While "no CRS personnel were in Wounded Knee" to restrain the militants, a "most serious incident" took place. According to a report, the incident "involved the alleged looting of a rancher's home and cattle by W K (Wounded Knee) occupants." Three days later, serious shooting broke out and one militant Indian was critically injured.

No Action

Still, Pottinger took no action against the unauthorized roadblock. "Pottinger has indicated to CRS and at staff briefings," states a report, "that he is inclined to arrest the leaders of the roadblock, but most other agencies advise against it for purposes of public relations or convenience."

Explaining what is meant by "convenience," the report tells of "a planned march on WK by clergymen and others (Easter) weekend. The government would rather have the marchers detained by a citizens' roadblock than by an FBI one."

The Easter march fizzled and Pottinger finally ordered the roadblock removed. But meanwhile, he was having trouble with the government's own roadblocks. He obtained an order from Washington to put all federal roadblocks and bunkers under the command of U.S. marshals.

"Previously," notes a report, "the marshals, the FBI and the BIA (Bureau of Indian Affairs) police each manned their own units, and it was difficult to verify and control the repeated incidents of federal vehicles and troops (mostly FBI and BIA police) moving into the WK perimeter."

The CRS peace-keeping team has now returned to Wounded Knee. But the Indians and the federal officers are still manning their armed bunkers. As one federal official put it, "We're now back to zero again."

MILITARY MARTINET: Major General Daniel Graham, a short, ramrod-straight authoritarian, is moving from the Defense Intelligence Agency to the Central Intelligence Agency to take charge of strategic estimates.

He has already alarmed CIA hands by writing in Army Magazine that vital security estimates should be made by military analysts, although he acknowledges that DIA estimates have been slanted in the past to please the Pentagon bosses and the CIA estimates have been more accurate.

The alarm hasn't been allayed any by reports reaching CIA headquarters of his conduct as head of the Wakefield (Va.) High School PTA. As leader of an arch-conservative faction, he tried to apply his military gumshoe methods to Wakefield High.

He circulated a memo, for example, urging that five teachers be fired and eight others be enlisted as informers. He wanted them to keep an eye on suspicious teachers and students. The Graham faction also brought pressure to oust the school's able principal, who finally left voluntarily.

In one stormy PTA meeting after another, Graham has fought student privileges including the right to participate fully in PTA activities. So vehement is he at PTA meetings that some neighborhood government officials are afraid to argue with him for fear he'll retaliate against them in their jobs. In response to our inquiries, Graham sent word through his secretary that he wouldn't speak with us.

INSIDE NORTH KOREA: Visitors just back from North Korea remind us that Kim 11 Sung's Communist regime is still one of the most oppressive on earth. They describe the towns as drab, the social life as sterile, the people as regimented and the atmosphere as harsh. Individually, the North Koreans were friendly and curious. But in the presence of other, they became stiff and strident. Their private opinions suddenly conformed to the rigid official line. North and South Korean delegations, meanwhile, are preparing for another round of negotiations. The northerners have been maneuvering for political advantage, the southerners for family and cultural ties that would break down the barriers between their divided country.

SIKKIM STRIFE: Hush-hush reports smuggled out of the Himalayan kingdom of Sikkim charge that India is financing riots against the regime of King Palden Thondup Namgyal as part of a plot to take full control of his land. The dashing king became a special favorite of Americans when he married a pretty New Yorker, Hope Cooke. Lately, demonstrations have shaken his monarchy and Indian troops have crossed the border "in the interest of law and order." Insiders close to the royal family have gotten word to us that, even as the troops moved in, Indian political officer K. S. Bajpai began to pressure the king to "hand over all power" to India. The king's sister, Princess Pema Tsedeun Yapshi-Pheunkhang, has told friends that Indian intelligence agents have been financing the opposition parties leading the riots.

Finding the Punishment

By WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY Jr.

I do not believe that President Nixon knew about the impending Watergate operation, let alone that he commissioned it. It is significant that, as the polls reveal, forty per cent of the American people believe otherwise. Significant because what forty per cent of the American people believe is, America being a republic, translatable into political pressure. It is predictable that that pressure will find voice in Congress: and that we shall soon be hearing discussion over what is the appropriate punishment to mete out to Richard Nixon.

Even those who decline to believe that Mr. Nixon had foreknowledge of the affair believe — many of them — that Nixon's supervision of the Watergate investigation was at best self-serving; at worst criminal. Nixon is not otherworldly in his habit of operations. His character is well known to the American people, who cannot easily be convinced that his preoccupation with cosmic concerns so absorbed him as to leave him transfixed, like Socrates in one of his philosophical trances, while such petty matters as Watergate flurried about him. Mr. Nixon is a man of compulsive curiosity concerning matters of potential political moment.

Mr. Gallup has not released the figures, but it is likely that a considerable majority of the American people believe that Richard Nixon knew way before April 17 that people surrounding him were not merely standing aside from the Watergate investigations, but were in fact conspiring — a word used here with precision — to obstruct justice. That belief will in due course crystallize into a legal formulation: namely that President Nixon was guilty of misprision of felony. Misprision of felony is itself a felony. It is predictable that a motion would then be introduced to impeach President Nixon, and it is imperative that that motion should be defeated.

One's mind goes back to a relevant historical episode. After the debacle, General Douglas MacArthur was sent to Tokyo to govern the defeated country of Japan. He ordered the Japanese parliament to devote itself to the formulation of a Constitution. A draft submitted to MacArthur for his approval called for extraordinarily severe penalties to be visited on anyone who attempted to assassinate the President. MacArthur, for all that his habits were imperious, was profoundly republican by training, and he vetoed the suggestion, insisting that in a democratic society no one should be above, or below, anyone else, where punishment was concerned. What is condign punishment for the pickpocket is condign punishment for the emperor, or for the assailant of an emperor, neither more nor less.

MacArthur was wrong in the generality, less wrong insofar as he insisted that someone should not be punished more for crimes against the emperor, than by the corollary that no one under any circumstances should be punished less.

In America, the President is the emperor in addition to being the prime minister. He is, no matter that his term as such is limited, the sovereign. When it is contemplated to execute the king, it is necessary to think first about the consequences on the people, rather than on the judicial poetry of the sentence. Salus populi, suprema lex.

If Nixon were impeached, the punishment would be visited primarily on the state. The line of reasoning can be corrupted by saying that to imprison the father is to punish his wife and children. However true it is that to punish someone is to afflict others than he, it is necessary to remind oneself that the sovereign is unique: that the punishment of the whole of the state is never justified. I am an enthusiast for Spiro Agnew. But I would not wish him to be President as a result of the impeachment of Nixon, nor would I think it a just imposition on those Americans who for whatever reason believe that Agnew would not serve them as President.

For such reasons it is critical to begin now to focus on what punishment should be meted out if it should be established that President Nixon was guilty, as so widely believed, of obstructing justice. An appropriate punishment tough on the malfeasor, but intelligent and magnanimous upon the innocent state, would be the censure of the President by the Congress. Such a censure, in the typical western country, would result in the resignation of the chief executive. But America's government is different, and it is imprudent not to shape the penalty with a view of such differences.

Inside Report

Greek Junta Misrepresented Spiro

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — In a flagrant falsehood, the semi-official Athens News Agency, which operates under the thumb of the Greek military dictatorship, misrepresented Vice President Spiro Agnew as delivering a paean of praise about strongman George Papadopoulos in a speech it said he made at Iowa's Drake University on April 13.

The Athens News Agency, in a story datelined Washington and headlined in the government-controlled Greek press, was actually quoting from a long question-and-answer exchange that the Vice President had with Drake students on March 15, 1972 — more than a full year earlier.

At that time, the Nixon administration's regard for Papadopoulos was much higher than it is today, based on a belief no longer held that Papadopoulos was really moving toward a restoration of parliamentary government and constitutional rights. Agnew made precisely that claim for Papadopoulos in the 1972 Drake speech.

Even so, Agnew, a long-time favorite of the Greek junta which seized power exactly six years ago, carefully noted in his 1972 speech that not all was well with the Greek dictatorship.

"Let's admit," he said, "... that Greece is, to some extent, a repressive government." That careful criticism was carefully edited out of the Athens News Agency report of the alleged Agnew speech 13 months later.

Worse yet, the English language Athens newspaper, Athens News, added a box, under the headline "Indication," at the end of its story about the alleged April 13, 1973, Agnew speech that went much farther.

The "Indication" stated that the speech was a strong hint that Papadopoulos would soon be invited to make an official visit to Washington.

The crudeness of this government-inspired deceit has both puzzled and angered American diplomats here. It also infuriated Agnew's staff, and not for the first time. Agnew was similarly misused in September 1971, when a routine letter written to a Greek-American by an Agnew aide turned up eight days later in misleading headlines in the controlled press.

When informed by Elias Demetracopoulos of the deceitful April 13 Agnew speech, Agnew's press secretary, J. Marsh Thomson, issued a statement expressing "surprise" at the outrageous misuse of Agnew's 1972 talk.

Sorting out the dictatorship's rationale for the newest deceit at Agnew's expense, U.S. officials (with exile leader Elias Demetracopoulos agreeing) believe Papadopoulos is in far weaker political condition today than a year ago and needs to show that he still has 100 per cent American backing.

A Connally Undefection?

The cascading Watergate scandal is now believed by political friends of John B. Connally to be the single principle reason for Connally's continuing inability to make up his mind to join the beleaguered Republican party.

Precisely because of Watergate, moreover, President Nixon's former Secretary of the Treasury and architect of the highly successful Phase I and II of the economic controls program, is coming under heavy White House pressure to announce his switch now.

The White House pitch goes as follows: as a turned Democrat, Connally would greatly reduce the level of suspicions from Republican party regulars if he joined their party at its time of greatest need, when it is embroiled in the messiest Republican scandal since Teapot Dome 50 years ago.

Conversely, the argument is being privately advanced that continuing Connally procrastination will infuriate these same Republican regulars, who will view the delay as Connally's effort to avoid contamination.

But such arguments are not having much impact on the charmingly arrogant former Democratic governor of Texas. To the contrary, Connally is coming under conflicting pressures from many old friends in his own Democratic party.

Moreover, the stench of some of the fund-raising techniques used by the Committee to Reelect the President (CREEP), including contributions "laundered" in Mexico, is particularly strong in Texas. Connally's Democratic cronies are using that to warn him the Republican party is just not for him.

Connally, who was always contemptuous of the caliber of Mr. Nixon's staff, is unlikely to be impressed by arguments on either side of the case. He will make his decision coldly, based on his own self-interest and his analysis of the long-range harm of Watergate to the Republican party.

Less Famous, But Similar to Manhattan

Rhinebeck and Its Origins

By TIM SCHUSTER

RHINEBECK — Any school child knows of the historic land transaction with Manhattan Indians that started that island on its road to Europeanization, but the origins of Rhinebeck are less famous but similar in many respects.

"In the summer of 1686," begins a new History of Rhinebeck published by the town and written by DeWitt Gurnell, "almost 80 years after Hendrick Hudson had first viewed the land which is Rhinebeck today, a significant real estate transaction was conducted among four Dutchmen and six Indians of the Esopus and Sepasco tribes."

The Sepascos, from the east shore, and the Esopus, from the west shore, sold Gerrit Artsen, Arie Roosa, Jan Elton, and Hendrick Kip some 2,200 acres of land lying along the river, and two deeds were filed in Kingston. Around 1700, the Dutchmen started a community called Kipsbergen, where Rhinecliff stands today.

It prospered, at the terminus of one of the main roads to Connecticut and located on the river. Hendrick Kip built his stone house in 1700, and brother Jacob built his in 1708, the same year in which he began operating a ferry from the Long Dock to Kingston. That ferry, under numerous operators, ceased in 1957 when the Kingston-Rhinecliff Bridge was completed.

Judge Henry Beekman, also of Kingston, was granted a patent in 1697 north of Kip's to the bounds of Major Peter Schuyler, and his son added some 5,000 acres in 1715 from the original Schuyler Patent.

As Kipsbergen and the Beekmans were growing, a settlement further inland was starting, near the present intersection of Routes 9 and 9G. It was called, among other things, "Pink's Corners" and "Rhinebeck."

The latter was attributed to the Palatinate-Rhineland area of Germany, as 35 families from that area arrived there in 1714 from the manor of Robert R. Livingston in Columbia County.

They had intended to pay for their passage by working to extract tar for the British Navy from the native pines along the river, but this project was a failure and they were in serious straits until invited to settle on the Beekman land.

It is believed that a log structure at Pink's Corners served as one of the earliest churches and as the earliest school in Dutchess County.

The location of the present Village of Rhinebeck, at the intersection of the Sepasco Trail (Route 308) and the King's Highway (Route 9) was started around 1700 when William Traphagen purchased this area and built a tavern.

In 1766 Traphagen's son Arent built the second tavern at the junction of the two highways, which was enlarged over the years to become the present-day Beekman Arms Hotel.

Later in the 18th century, the name Rhinebeck disappeared from the settlement to the north and was taken by the prospering new village.

Of significance to the Bi-Centennial Celebration being planned for Rhinebeck and Red Hook was the large part played by the young colonial area during the Revolutionary War.

When word came to Rhinebeck in 1775 of the events in Concord, Mass. a petition was circulated rebuking Great Britain for attacking the rights and liberties of freemen.

Two hundred forty-six residents signed the pledge; 206 did not. The fourth of four divisions of the Continental Army from New York was formed in Rhinebeck, under the command of Henry Beekman Livingston.

The company drilled on the lawn of the Bogardus Tavern, and in September moved with General Montgomery to Albany, eventually joining with other companies to begin the successful siege of Montreal. After General Montgomery's death at Quebec, his army was captured and only a few returned to Rhinebeck.

When the British under General How and General Vaughn burned Kingston as the state capital in 1777, a Rhinebeck minuteman named Barent Van Wagnen rode through Rhinebeck and Wurtemburg to warn all of the shelling and burning at Kingston.

The next day he relayed the news that Col. Henry Beekman's home had been hit by cannon fire and that a whaleboat full of British marines was landing at Long Dock.

The men of the town hurried to meet the attack, but the British had turned up River Road. They rested on Cruger's Island, then retreated when the results of the Battle of Saratoga were learned.

The Revolution abolished the leasehold system, which made it difficult for farmers to prosper, and as freeholders gained more independence, political influence was diffused.

The Town of Red Hook was established as a separate town from Rhinebeck in 1812, and the Village of Rhinebeck was incorporated in 1834. And the last stagecoach on the New York-to-Albany route left Rhinebeck in 1851, ending over 50 years of service.

A plan for joint celebration of the Bi-Centennial between Red Hook and Rhinebeck has been proposed by Judge DeWitt Gurnell, Rhinebeck historian, with the parsonage of the Stone Church in Old Rhinebeck to serve as headquarters, midway between the two villages.

And he has also proposed utilizing this building for a longer period of time, coordinating the historical documents and records of the area in a central location that can be accessible to residents and students of the history of this part of the country.

Tax Relief Announced

ALBANY — Provision for tax abatements for damage to real property resulting from the effects of Hurricane Agnes have been announced by the Office of Local Government and the State Board of Equalization and Assessment.

When Hurricane Agnes struck, and damaged or destroyed many homes and businesses, including some in Ulster County, the taxable status date had already been passed.

Assessments of these properties reflected the condition and value of these properties prior to the disaster and of course, taxes would normally be calculated on the value of the property on the taxable status date, thereby adding to the burden of disaster victims trying to recover their economic balance.

The Real Property Tax law provides for abatement of taxes on properties damaged as a result of Hurricane Agnes to the extent of such damage, and state assistance to local governments and school districts to compensate for the revenue loss because of such tax abatements.

Ulster is among 26 other counties included in the disaster area.

Tax abatements are granted on the basis of applications by property owners and the percentage loss of each parcel damaged as a result of Hurricane Agnes. The state board, in the first instance, determines the percentage loss, subject to modification by local boards of assessment review. On June 1, 1973, local boards of assessment review are required by law to meet to hear requests by taxpayers for modification of the percentage loss determined by the state board.

Tax abatements provided by the statute are granted for the latest local fiscal year for which taxes are levied on an assessment roll having a taxable date prior to the disaster.

Antipoverty Rescue Move Underway

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional supporters of community-based antipoverty programs are mounting a rescue operation in hopes of saving them from President Nixon's budget axe.

They are willing to make a major concession in the way the programs operate in exchange for continued federal funding of them.

A federal court ruled that the administration is acting illegally now in phasing out the Office of Economic Opportunity's community action agencies. But the situation will be different after the fiscal year ends June 30.

Nixon has not asked for any money to continue the programs after June 30, and if Congress doesn't provide any they will be out of business unless taken over by the states or cities in which they operate.

That places the immediate effort to save them in the appropriations committees of the House and Senate, which is just where the administration wants it. A secret memo on the dismantling of OEO, uncovered by Congress two months ago, contains this advice:

"Debate should be steered to the appropriations committees, whose interests most closely align with the President's, and which, unlike their legislative committee counterparts, have few members with strong feelings for OEO."

The administration is relying on the strong anti-OEO sentiment in the House Appropriations Committee to block any funding of community action agencies in fiscal 1974.

OEO supporters, in their effort to preserve federal funding, are telling the Appropriations Committee the issue goes beyond OEO, involving the basic rights and powers of Congress.

Their main ammunition is the April 10 order of Federal Judge William B. Jones prohibiting the administration from continuing its phaseout of community action programs.

Judge Jones said the administration could not shut down OEO now simply because it decided not to fund it in 1974.

All the congressional OEO supporters are asking for now is enough money to let the community action agencies meet administrative and overhead costs after June 30. Meanwhile, they plan to seek new legislation that would place the agencies under the direct control of state or local governments.

'Largest Bomb Ever' in Ulster

BELFAST (UPI) — Extremists apparently operating from the Irish Republic set off an 800-pound bomb—the largest ever used in Ulster violence—in front of a British armored personnel carrier Saturday, but mistimed the explosion. The two soldiers in the armored car were not hurt.

"It was a miracle no one was killed... an absolute miracle," a spokesman for the British army said. "Only an error in timing saved them."

An army spokesman said the bomb was the biggest ever used in the almost four years of political and sectarian violence in Northern Ireland. It gouged out a crater 40 feet wide and 10 feet deep just in front of the armored car near the border town of Beleek, 90 miles west of Belfast.

The car was unable to stop in time and plunged into the hole, but the soldiers escaped injury. Soldiers later found wires leading from where the bomb was cross the border.

"We've had 700 pound (bombs) before but never anything this big," the army spokesman said. "If it had been triggered off directly underneath the car it would have blown it at least 30 yards into the air.

In Ulster's two biggest cities, Belfast and Londonderry, the militant Ulster Defense Association—the Protestant counterpart to the Irish Republican Army—turned out in force Saturday, blocking city streets for an hour to protest the planned extradition of one of their members to the Irish Republic on two murder charges.

Ulster security forces were alerted against possible confrontation between the UDA and the IRA, but no incidents were reported.

UDA members, including women, paraded in blue uniforms. It was their first show of strength in almost six months.

Veto Surprised Sponsor Of Vols Benefits Bill

ALBANY, N.Y. (UPI) — The sponsor of a bill to increase death benefits paid to survivors of volunteer firemen killed in the line of duty said Friday he was "surprised and extremely disappointed" by Governor Rockefeller's veto of the measure.

"This bill provided the first change in death benefits to the family of volunteer firemen since 1957, and at no cost to the state because of local communities establish the insurance coverage," Sen. John D. Caemmerer, R-East Williston, said.

The governor announced Thursday that he vetoed the bill to raise firefighters' life insurance coverage from $1,000 to $5,000 because volunteers are already covered by workman's compensation.

Caemmerer said, "I cannot fathom his refusal to approve this humane and surely appropriate gesture." He said the cost of the broader coverage for the 150,000 volunteers in the state would have been not more than $70,000.

Nixon Signs Money Bill For Students, Veterans

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon has signed a $1.36 billion bill increasing funding for loans to college students, benefits for Vietnam Era veterans and aid for school districts with heavy concentrations of federal employes, the White House said Saturday.

Under provisions of the money bill, signed by Nixon before he left Friday for his mountaintop retreat at Camp David:

—Public schools districts serving a large number of children whose parents are civilian or military government employes will receive an extra $86 million in federal aid for school construction or maintenance between now and July 1, the start of the next fiscal year.

—The Health, Education and Welfare Department (HEW) will have an additional $872 million for higher education student assistance, with an increase of $122 million in so-called basic opportunity grants, $210 million in supplemental grants, $270 million in work-study programs and $269.4 million in direct student loans.

—The Veterans Administration will get $468 million for increased GI education and training benefits under the 1972 Vietnam Era Readjustment Assistance Act.

The money was contained in an emergency supplemental appropriation measure passed by Congress before the Easter recess.

Two-Headed Baby Dies

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A two-headed baby boy has died of an apparent heart malfunction, doctors at a private clinic reported Saturday.

They said the infant, christened both Carlos Alberto and Arturo, died Friday morning but the cause of death will not be known until an autopsy is completed.

The baby was born Tuesday by Caesarean section in the northern city of Tucuman and flown here two days later because more medical facilities were available. He weighed nine pounds.

Neither of the parents accompanied the infant to Buenos Aires.

Dr. Raul Schwam, who delivered the infant, said the mother was a young housewife and the father was a part-time soccer referee who works at a Tucuman store. They are parents of a normal 3-year-old daughter, the doctor added, and they asked not to be identified.

According to doctors at the San Cristobal Clinic in Buenos Aires, two spinal columns that were joined at the base of the torso supported the two nearly identical heads side by side. A small conical protrusion of flesh separated the heads, and both moved independently.

The body had two well-developed arms and legs, one heart and two lungs, one of which did not function, they said. When one leg was pinched, the doctors added, the head on that side of the body would cry but the other would not. They said this meant each head reacted only to its side of the body.

Several doctors assisted Schwam in the delivery, and he said that, when the infant was delivered, there was a discussion whether the baby's single unbilical cord should be tied to stop the bleeding and preserve its life.

Firemen Good, Injured In Friday Blaze

WALKER VALLEY — Two firmen injured in a large barn fire Firday afternoon were reported in good condition by Fire Chief J. Gregston Greer Saturday, with one volunteer recovering in Middletown Hosptial.

A large beam fell on fire firghter Robert Morgenthau of Walker Valley. He was found to have a chipped vertebrae, three cracked ribs and several lacerations. Pine Bush ambulance rushed him to the bospital.

Th other injury was suffered by Charles Tremper, who was involved in an auto accident with another car while on his way to the fire. There were no serious injuries resulting from the accident.

No cause of the fire was reported by Greer, which destroyed a major portion of a 200 foot long barn on a farm owned by Scott Watkin, located on Route 52 three miles east of Walker Valley.

Walker Valley sent three pieces of equipment to the farm, joined by mutual aid assistance from Pine Bush. A total of more than 60 men fought the flaming structure for more than three hours before it was brought under control.

Firemen pumped water from the Kattekill Creek, some 1,500 feet from the scene, and managed to save one section of the building.

Greer said that "a lot of equipment" was lost, including a truck, a jeep, two tractors and several implements, and firemen achieved their major objective of protecting the nearby house and outbuildings from the fire.

Firemen also managed to save two horses from the barn, the only livestock there at the time of the blaze.

'Save the Eagle' Program At Hudson Valley Federal

CAMPAIGN OPENS — Discussing role of Hudson Valley Federal Savings and Loan Association in the "Save the Eagle" program are Warren E. McKeon (L), regional director of the State Department of Environmental Conservation; Robert E. Deitrick, president of the local banking institution and Dominic Vignola, vice-president of Devey, Thompson and Vignola Advertising, Inc. (Freeman photo by Kruh)

KINGSTON — The bald eagle, symbolic bird of the United States for hundreds of years, does not nest in the Hudson Valley, but he will become a familiar figure due to the advertising campaign undertaken by Hudson Valley Federal Savings and Loan Association.

A "Save the Eagle" program has been initiated by that bank in a coordinated effort with the National Audubon Society to increase public awareness of the endangerment of the bald eagle as a species.

The program will consist of distribution of a free brochure published by the Audubon Society, a poster competition for children of elementary school age, and a golfers "eagle" reward.

In a news conference at the 235 Fair Street office of Hudson Valley Savings and Loan, it was pointed out that the major reason for this disappearance of the national bird is indiscriminate shooting of birds of prey.

The bald eagle is often mistaken for an ordinary hawk because its distinctive white head marking does not appear until the bird is four years old.

Other factors, especially noticeable in Florida and along the shores of the Great Lakes, are the increasing encroachment of "civilization" with its attendant destruction of wild areas necessary for the nesting habits of the eagle and the effects of DDT assimilated from fish, the primary food of the bald eagle.

It has been found in public relations work that the bald eagle garners amazing interest among the general public of this country, and the media are generally receptive to photos and stories concerning the bird and its plight.

Federal legislation has protected the bald eagle as an endangered species since 1940. Despite this fact, it was estimated that of some 163 birds whose cause of death could be determined during the past 10 years, about 55 per cent were shot.

Dominic Vignola, vice-president of the Schenectady public relations firm of Devey, Thompson, and Vignola, explained this week that the poster contest will be divided into two categories: grades one thorugh four and grades five through eight, with prizes in each category to be a $50 bond; $25 cash; and $15 cash. All participants will receive tickets to the Catskill Game Garm.

And the golf competition will be open to players at participating golf clubs and courses in the area. A prize of one-half dozen golf balls will be awarded to each player who scores an "eagle" in regular foursome play.

Area Businesses Form 'The Communicators'

KINGSTON — Five area businesses have formed an association, "The Communicators," to provide a talent pool "capable of serving the total communications needs of a wide range of clients on the national, regional, state and local levels," it was revealed today.

The businesses are: CTA Public Relations, Inc., Kindustry Corporation, Photo Workshop, all of Kingston; Woodstock Visual Arts, Inc., and P's & Q's Graphics, Woodstock.

Although each member business retains its autonomy and will continue to seek and serve customers independently, the association will serve as a vehicle for promotion of services as a "package" and to offer clients a service of "one contract, one monthly bill" to cover the total communications program, according to John R. Warren, a spokesman for the group.

The philosophy behind the formation of the association, he said, was that "there exists sufficient first-rate talent in copywriting, art, photography and related disciplines here in the Kingston-Woodstock area to serve the needs of even the largest national advertising accounts. With transportation being what it is today, proximity to sources of supply is no longer a limitation. In fact, we can be on the Thruway and well on our way toward anywhere while our colleagues in New York City are creeping three or four blocks cross-town in Manhattan, or waiting to enter the Holland Tunnel. Further, as a group we offer more flexibility than most of our counterparts in the large cities, and certainly the environment here is more conducive to creativity."

CTA Public Relations, Inc., is a general public relations counseling agency offering a total communications service coordinating the public relations, advertising and marketing functions for industrial, business and institutional clients. Established as a proprietorship in Kingston in 1960, it was incorporated in 1967. Warren, an accredited member of the Public Relations Society of America, is president of the corporation; Deweese W. DeWitt, who retired in 1970 as president of Hudson Valley Federal Savings and Loan Association, is vice-president and treasurer, and Mrs. Audria S. Warren is secretary.

Kindustry Corporation is a fresh, new corporation organized in 1972 as a management consulting firm specializing in personnel communications and development, general management, planning and motivation. As a part of its operation, Kindustry is an authorized distributor for Earl Nightingale Communications. Philip G. Cullum Jr., president, has B.A. and M.S. degrees in mathematics, is a member of the American Management Association, has taught at the University level and has six years experience in computer software design and development.

Photo Workshop, with three full-time photographers, offers services in commercial and industrial photography including such specialties as product photography, executive portraiture, art-flat copying, color-slide program production and slide duplication. Recently installed commercial color production capability on its own premises is the latest addition to facilities which have been expanding since the studio was founded in 1954. Dave Fletcher and Bill Sill are partners in Photo Workshop, member of Professional Photographers of America, Inc., and licensed in the city of Kingston.

Woodstock Visual Arts, Inc., is a full production, 16 mm sound on film facility for scripted, documentary, industrial and commercial films, and has complete monaural and stereo recording facilities for on location and studio work. The firm is organized to handle all film production needs from concept to completion, and has recorded demos, records and commercial radio spots. Principals are Dennis Nils Drogseth, Alex Osina and Ellwood Ballard.

P's & Q's Graphics, an art and design agency equipped to handle artwork and drafting needs of businesses, recently created an entire line of macrame and needlepoint kits, from finished products to the packaging, artwork design, instruction sheets diagrams and copy. Carole Walsh, proprietor, studied art and design at Adelphi University, worked for Sam Flax, Inc., and at American Photograph as an airbrush artist.

VEGA'S INSIDE STORY — An inside look at some of the features that make the Chevrolet Vega the talk of America's small cars is given in this specially built "cutaway" model to be featured at Michael Chevrolet, Inc., 731 Broadway, from May 2 to May 9. The exhibit will be animated by means of electric motors that cause the trunk area of the coupe to open and close on cycle while engine, transmission and other moving parts operate.

BUSTER DUNN OPENING — Carmine Sabino, supervisor of the Town of Ulster, cuts the ribbon officially opening the new showroom of the Buster Dunn Equipment Company, located on Route 28, just below Route 28A. The open house, held recently, was for the inspection of the full line of John Deere equipment that the company sells. In addition the company also sells, Artic Mini Bikes, Bikes, Wankel engine Lawn Mowers, Sno-Mobiles and Trail Breaker Bikes. Shown with Sabino are Mrs. Doris Dunn, Larry Nenneman of John Deere Company, and Buster Dunn. (Sol Holzman photo)

INSURANCE AGENTS ELECT — John Levy (C) was elected president of the Kingston Area Independent Insurance Agent's Association during a recent meeting. Flanking the president are Mark Riseley (L) secretary and Lou Conti, treasurer. The next meeting of the group will be held May 4 at the Kingston Holiday Inn at 12:30. Harold Glass will speak on fraud and arson investigations. Any area agent interested in attending may contact Secretary Riseley. (Freeman photo by Haines)

Saugerties Woman Cares

By LYNN MULVANEY

SAUGERTIES

When Jeanne Brice of Saugerties, read an article in The Daily Freeman last December describing the plight of a seriously ailing 61-year-old Korean priest who was struggling to care for 27 "ill-fated" children in Busan, Korea, she gathered together some clothes, some soap and other personal articles and sent them with some money to the orphange.

Three months passed and she heard nothing. . .and with good reason, for Father Joseph Tjyeng recently suffered his second stroke in two years and has been left parlayzed on both sides.

In a letter, mailed April 8 and dictated because he is unable to write, Father Tjyeng said, "I hesitated very much to tell you of this sad news because I had a feeling it might cause some unnecessary stir as I know how concerned and sympathetic you have been to me and your children."

". . . .But it aches my heart to inform you that, due to my failing health and aggravating financial difficulties, I had to close down St. Paul's Children's Home and transfer the dear children to the Sacred Love Home, Buk-Busan, Busan City, Korea."

Then, Mrs. Brice received a second letter, this one from Father Tjyeng's friend, Leo G. S. Woo, who is the director of the Sacred Love Home.

Woo told of now caring for 68 boys and girls of extremely unfortunate background, including Father Tjyeng's flock of 27 from St. Paul's whose ages range from three to 17 years.

Describing his work at the orphanage as "the hardest time of my life, begging off from one source to another to feed, clothe and educate the little ones," Woo said that the entire livelihood of the children depend solely on his ability to beg. "There are a few pieces of land where some crops and vegetables are grown, but it cannot be counted upon as a decisive income," he said.

"Now that the size of the family has been enlarged by the children from St. Paul's the weight of my chores has been made that much heavier.

"So though I find it hard to speak out, I wonder if it will be difficult for you to continue your love and help at least to the children from St. Paul's."

Mrs. Brice, who was very touched last December by Father Tjyeng's words, recalls that he was "longing for having charitable persons who would be interested in these unfortunate children by giving financial contributions or any materials (any size used clothing, school supplies, vitamins and used articles) and perhaps becoming a foster parent to one or two of the children."

VFW Launches Its Buddy Poppy Month

KINGSTON

People in the Kingston area are urged to buy and wear buddy poppies during the month of May by Commander Albert DeLuca of Joyce-Schirick Post 1386, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The poppies will be sold by VFW volunteers throughout the month in this, the 52nd year of their sale by veterans.

They were first sold by units of the VFW in 1921 in response to an appeal from Madame Anna Guerin of France for funds to aid the war orphans of France. The appeal was world wide and poppies are still sold in most countries of the former British Commonwealth, as well as in Europe and South America.

In 1922 the VFW conceived the idea of selling poppies made by disabled veterans in U. S. hospitals to support a national veterans' welfare program.

This year, more than 8,000 posts and their ladies auxiliaries will participate, with nearly 100,000 volunteers expecting to sell almost 15 million poppies.

Funds derived from the sale, under VFW rules, must be used exclusively for welfare of disabled and needy veterans and the widow and orphans of deceased veterans.

The man who makes the finished poppy is paid a nominal wage for his labors to provide a little spending money and to keep him occupied in long term hospital confinement.

"In Flanders Field where poppies grow. . . ." was the original inspiration for this symbol of aid to those who need it.

NEW PALTZ

Councilman George Mackey's letter of resignation was read at a special New Paltz Town Board meeting Thursday night. Mackey had served one and one-half years on the board, and cited family and personal interests, a lack of time to devote to public service, and possible conflicts between his business interests and further service on the town board as his reasons for resigning. Mackey's resignation was accepted with regret by the board. It is effective immediately. Town board members praised Mackey's service on the board, particularly in zoning matters. Supervisor Theodore Lasher said Mackey's successor would be named at the next regular town board meeting.

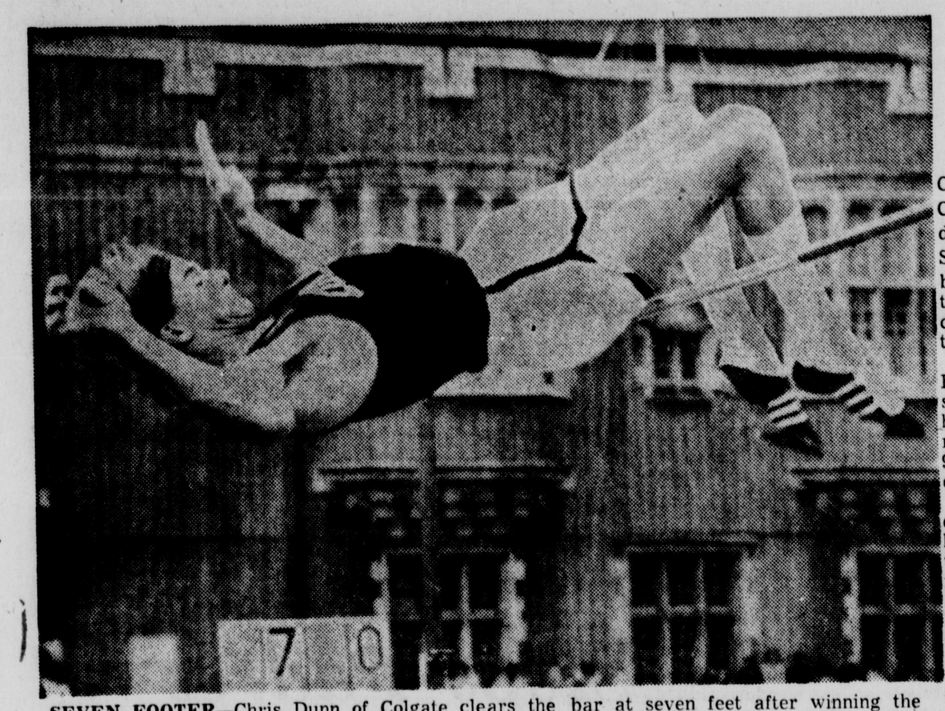
John Cabell Places Fifth in Penn Relays

★ ★ ★ Runs His Fastest Two Miles ★ ★ ★



SEVEN FOOTER—Chris Dunn of Colgate clears the bar at seven feet after winning the College Championship High Jump at the Penn Relays in Philadelphia Saturday with a jump of 6-10. He then beat out Dwight Stones, winner of the Olympic high jump, with this one of seven feet. (UPI)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Competing against the East Coast's best collection of distance runners, Kingston High School's John Cabell grabbed a bronze medal for fifth place at the Penn Relays here Saturday, clocking his best time ever in the two-mile event, a 9:19.6.

Bob Perkins of Collegiate High School of Richmond Va., successfully defended the title he won here last year in a meet record of 9:00.5. Perkins ran 9:06 in the rain to defeat the event's other 24 entries.

Cabell, who clipped 11 seconds off his previous best time, felt he had "too much left" after the race was over. He ran the final quarter in 63.8.

Second place went to Howard McNiff of Albertus Magnus High in Bardonia. McNiff posted a 9:15.1, and his showing foreshadows an upcomeing duel with Cabell in the New York State championships to be held in Buffalo later this spring. In their only previous meeting, McNiff nipped Cabell at Cornell in an indoor meet this winter.

Dave Wall of Jersey City, N.J., claimed third with a 9:18.7, and Mike Elder of Haddon Township, Westmont, N.J., took fourth by four-tenths of a second over Cabell with a time of 9:19.2.

"John is really pointing to that state meet," said KHS coach Dean Short. "McNiff only beat him by four seconds, and that's really not much in this kind of a race."

In the collegiate division, the Villanova Wildcats sped to the two-mile relay title with a time of 7:25.7 to complete a sweep of the distance events. Earlier in the day Villanova won the four-mile relay, outdistancing Bowling Green by 120 yards with a time of 16:31.7, and on Friday they captured the distance medley.

Arizona State made its trip across the country worthwhile by winning the 440-yard relay championship when Maurice Peoples came from behind to nip Norfolk St. in 40.7. Behind Norfolk were Texas El Paso, Memphis State and Fisk. Memphis State and Fisk were later disqualified.

In the three mile run, Charles McGuire of Penn State maintained a five yard lead throughout the final 300 yards to win over Bruce Fischer of Syracuse in a time of 13:41.6. Robert Lees of Central Connecticut finished third. Paul Bannon of Memphis State was fourth, and Richard Mull of Georgetown was fifth.

Ken McBride of Manhattan leaped 50-8¼ to win the triple jump over Joy Jenkins of North Carolina Central. Third was Edward Mennox of St. Joseph's followed by Jim Leonard of Cornell and Dave Watt of the University of Toronto.

Hans Hoglund of Texas-El Paso defended his meet shot put title with a throw of 62-8½, two and three-fourths inches short of his winning throw last year. In second place was Ron Semkin of Arizona State at 58-11½. Third was Mike Larrison of Florida, and fifth was Edward Burgess of Rutgers.

In the sprint-medley relay championship, a race which saw the national collegiate record of 3:14.8 set here last year by North Carolina Central, Michigan held off the defending champions and Georgetown to win in 3:19.7. North Carolina Central had a time of 3:21.8 and Georgetown posted 3:22.0. Florida was fourth and Northeastern was fifth.

Penn captured the shuttle hurdle relay when anchor man Bruce Collins caught Florida's Hesley Bostic at the tape, but Florida was fourth and North- The winning time was 57.6 as Morgan State, Navy and Weatern Michigan completed the places.

Colgate's Chris Dunn cleared seven feet to defeat olympian Dwight Stones in the high jump. Dunn won the collegiate division at 6-10.

Dan Sikes' 68 Catches Dickson

Bob Dickson Chips to Green

DALLAS (UPI) — Dan Sikes, who suffered through a miserable year in 1972 and lost his exemption in the process, combatted a strong southerly wind Saturday to shoot a two-under 68 and tie Bob Dickson for the third round lead of the $150,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Ten players were under par when play began over the 6,932-yard, par-70 Preston Trail Golf Club course Saturday and Sikes was the only one of those 10 who could put together a sub-par round.

His 68 left him with a 54-hole total of 206 and knotted with Dickson, the former amateur sensation who on Saturday led by as many as three strokes before falling victim to the wind.

Dickson had to settle for a one-over 71 after bogeying three out of five holes in the middle of his round.

Sikes and Dickson held a three-stroke lead over Bert Yancey, whose 71 Saturday gave him a 209. Yancey was the only golfer other than the two leaders to be under par after three rounds because of the troublesome winds.

An eight-way jamup came at even-par 210 and a hot round by any of them could bring them the $30,000 first prize today. In at par were Larry Hinson, Bruce Crampton, Leonard Thompson, Bert Greene, Bob E. Smith, Lanny Wadkins, Rod Curl and Tom Weiskopf.

Second-round leader Don Bies lost four strokes to par on the ninth, 10th and 11th holes and wound up with a 75 for a one-over 211 to tie with Roy Pace, Bruce Fleisher, Allen Miller and Orville Moody, who had the day's best round of 66.

Arnold Palmer was among those at 212.

Sikes was the steadiest of all, parring 16 holes and coming up with birdies on the two par-5 holes.

"I missed some good putts for birdies," he said. "But I saved some pars with putts in the range of six feet. That's the thing I haven't been doing—saving pars."

Sikes, for years one of the steadiest player on the tour, was troubled by illness and a rash of bad playing last year. As a result he finished 63rd on the money winning list and lost his exemption.

Dickson, winner of both the British and American amateur tournaments before he turned pro, birdied two of the first three holes to move in front of the field by three shots.

But at the sixth things began to go wrong. He bogeyed that hole when he pushed his drive into the right rough, bogeyed the tough par-3 eighth when he missed the green and bogeyed the long, par-4 10th to fall into a tie with Sikes.

Dickson bogeyed the 16th hole as well to fall a stroke behind, but got back into the tie with a birdie on the par-4 17th.

Among those who found disaster Saturday were Bies, Julius Boros and Australian David Graham.

Boros bogeyed the first hole and double bogeyed the second and wound up shooting a 76. Graham double bogeyed the third hole and faded to a 77.

Alexander Upsets Laver

GOTEBORG Sweden (UPI) — Sixth-seeded John Alexander of Australia qualified for next month's World Championships of Tennis (WCT) final in Dallas, Texas, by beating his second-seeded countryman Rod Laver, 6-3, 7-6, Saturday in the semifinal of the $50,000 Swedish Professional Tennis Championships.

Alexander will face the winner of the match between top-seeded Stan Smith of Sea Pines S.C. and Gerald Battrick of Britain today for the Swedish title.

The victory assured the 21-year-old Alexander of at least seven points in this tournament, increasing his total to 27 points and enabling his to secure one of the four top places in this WCT group. The top four from each of the two groups are eligiable for the Final play in Dallas next month.

Alexander surprised Laver with brilliant net attacks and some spectular volley shots.

Mets Edge Braves, 4-2

ATLANTA (UPI) — Ed Kranepool's two-run, bases-loaded single highlighted a three-run rally in the eighth inning Saturday night and gave the weak-hitting New York Mets a 4-2 come-from-behind victory over the Atlanta Braves.

The Mets, who had been blanked or scored less than two runs in five of their last eight games, fell behind 2-1 in the seventh when the Braves erupted for two runs on Dave Johnson's homer and a run-scoring single by Sonny Jackson.

But the Mets chased Braves starter Ron Reed, now 0-4, in the top of the eighth when Willie Mays followed Felix Millan's leadoff single with a double and after reliefer Roric Harrison deliberately walked Rusty Staub to load the bases, Kranepool rifled a grounder to right to put the Mets ahead, 3-2.

Jerry Grote got the Mets an insurance run by singling home Staub in the same inning.

Starter Jon Matlack, now 2-3, held the Braves to just two singles over the first six innings but Johnson led off with his second homer of the year to start the Braves' the seventh and the Braves had five hits off Matlack when he was relieved for a pinch-hitter in the eighth.

The Mets got their first run in the third inning when Staub doubled home Ted Martinez.

Tug McGraw worked the final two innings for the Mets to get the save for Matlack.

DERBY HOPEFUL—Shecky Greene, jockey Walt Blum up, won the Stepping Stone easily Saturday in Louisville, Ky. (UPI)

'Twas the Greening Of Shecky

LOUISVILLE (UPI) — Shecky Greene, displaying the speed that carried him to three stakes victories in Florida, outran six rivals in the $10,000 Stepping Stone Purse on the opening of Churchill Downs Saturday, but the flashy colt remained a doubtful starter for the 99th Kentucky Derby in a week's time.

Going to the front at the start of the seven furlong race, the three-year-old colt stayed there the rest of the way to win by five lengths. Restless Jet, a more likely starter in the first of the triple crown races, finished with a strong run through the home stetch to take second place.

Cari County took third.

Restless Jet, winner of the Everglade Stakes at Hialeah Park, continued on after the finish to complete a mile in 1:37 in preparation for the Kentucky Derby. Pvt. Smiles was fourth, followed by Knightly Dawn, Twice A Prince and Trip Stop, the only starter who was not nominated for the Kentucky Derby.

Walter Blum rode Shecky Greene, who cut out a blistering pace. The colt did what he does best—run as fast as he can as far as he can—the speedy chestnut streaked the first quarter mile in 22:45, the half mile in 44:45 and six furlongs in a sparkling 1:09 2:. he finished the complete journey in 1:23.

Shecky Green was a strong favorite and paid $3.00, $2.80, and $2.40 across the board. Restless Jet, who was next to last for the first half mile and made up about six lengths in the stretch, paid $5.00 and $3.20. Cari County, who was second until caught right at the finish line, paid $2.60.

This was the 19th running of the Stepping Stone and only two of its winners, Swaps in 1955 and Majestic Prince in 1969, went on to win the Kentucky Derby. Last year, Hold Your Peace, who won more impressively than Sheckey Green did not even run in the Kentucky Green.

In the $20,000 added La-Troienne Stakes, La Prevoyante, the 1972 2-year-old filly champion, just lasted to win by a head over the fast-closing Old Goldie. Coraggioso was third.

La Prevoyante, eligible for the Derby but sheduled to run the day before in the Kentucky Oaks, was an even stronger favorite than Shecky Greene with a crowd of 22,428, an all-time opening day record. She paid $2.40, $2.20 and $2.20.

Old Goldie paid $2.60 and $2.20 and Coraggioso paid $2.20.

Colonels Dispute Indiana Victory

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Freddie Lewis scored on a driving jump shot with 17 seconds left in overtime to give the Indiana Pacers a disputed 111-107 victory over the Kentucky Colonels and a 1-0 lead in their American Basketball Association championship.

Kentucky had contended it won the game in regulation time on a shot by guard Jimmy O'Brien, making the score 102-100, but the referees ruled the shot came after the 30-second clock had expired.

Lewis, who finished with 29 points, added two free throws with one scond left to cap the scoring.

Dan Issel of Kentucky led all scorers with 33 points.

Kentucky had rallied from a 19-point first-quarter deficit to go ahead midway in the third period and the Colonels kept the lead most of the rest of the way.

O'Brien's disputed shot came with 35 seconds remaining in regulation time, a jumper from the left corner.

However, after a five-minute conference at the scorer's table, the shot was disallowed.

Kentucky insisted that a previous shot had hit the rim, which would have started the 30-second clock again. But a replay of the shot showed that the ball had hit the backboard but not the rim.

Indiana zoomed to a 38-19 lead in the first quarter by outscoring the Colonels 18-2 in the last five minutes of the period.

Issel was the only effective Kentucky scorer in the early going, hitting 15 of his team's first 24 points.

The Colonels narrowed the gap to 44-37 midway in the second quarter but Indiana came back to widen their halftime margin to 65-51.

Kentucky scored the first 17 points of the third period to take a 68-65 lead.

The Colonels, Eastern Division champions, held the lead just about all the way until Roger Brown boomed in a three-point basket with 1:09 left in regulation time to lift the Pacers into the 100-100 tie.

Indiana never trailed in overtime.

Kentucky had announced it was playing the game under protest before O'Brien's disputed shot. The team contested a three-second call which nullified a basket by Colonels' center Artis Gilmore.

Indiana pivotman Mel Daniels had 20 points and 14 rebounds while Issel topped the rebounders with 20.

Will Walton Please Stand So Soviets Can See Him

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (UPI) — When the coach of the touring Russian national basketball team was asked about Bill Walton after the squad's arrival at New York Wednesday night, he said he had never heard of UCLA's two-time All-America.

"Is he black or white?" Vladimir Kandrashin quizzed reporters.

Kandrashin and the Soviets, 72-63 winners over a team of Utah all-stars at Salt Lake City Wednesday night, will find out first hand about Walton today.

The Russians and a Bob Cousy-coached U.S. all-star team, headed by the 6-11 Walton, open a six-game series at the Forum here at 12:30 p.m. PDT. The teams meet again tonight at San Diego.

There is a revenge motive for the American players, according to Hawaii's Tom Henderson, a member of the U.S. Olympic team which lost the controversial 51-50 decision to the USSR at Munich last summer.

"I want revenge," he declared. "I want to win badly for my own peace of mind and I think we can win. We're at home now, not in Germany."

In its first Olympic basketball defeat ever, the U.S. squad was the victim of two three-second time extensions. The Americans called them illegal and refused to accept their silver medals.

"Without Walton, we would have had a hard time beating the Russians" said Pete Newell, coach of the 1960 U.S. Olympic team and now general manager of the NBA champion Los Angeles Lakers.

"But with Walton we are immeasureably stronger. The Russians are well organized and experienced. We have a tendency to underestimate them but they're very good."

Added Cousy: "I think it's safe to say we'll accelerate the pace a little from Munich."

Stanley Finals Start Today

MONTREAL (AP) — The Montreal Canadiens and Chicago Black Hawks open their best-of-seven showdown for the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup today, only the second time ever that the league's two division champions have clashed for the cherished hardware.

Montreal set a record, losing only 10 games during the regular season en route to the East Division title. Then the Canadiens eliminated Buffalo ir six games and Philadelphia in five to reach the Cup finals.

Chicago won its third straight West Division crown and eliminated St. Louis and New York in preliminary Cup rounds, finishing both clubs off in five games apiece.

What's With Mike Ferraro?

by Charles J. Tiano, Sports Editor

What's with Mike Ferraro? That's a fair question to ask about a native baseball player who appeared in 115 games at third base for the Milwaukee Brewers in 1972. And now finds himself on the western side of the continent playing with a Minnesota Twin farm team in the Pacific Coast League.

Sure, it's Triple A baseball, but isn't that a helluva comedown for a guy who has been trying to make it for years—finally made it with the Milwaukee Brewers and batted a respectable .255 to go with one of the best gloves in organized baseball!

The Milwaukee Brewers' press, radio and TV guide for 1973 thumbnailed Mike in terms that must seem ironical these days, as he bides his time waiting for a clear shot at a third base job with Tacoma.

The Brewer guide revealed that Ferraro batted .292 with men on base . . . 307 after the sixth inning . . . and tore up Detroit Tiger pitching for a .426 average (26 for 61) and getting four of his five 3-hit games against Billy Martin's Bengals. Do those statistics sound like some broken down major leaguer ready to spend his last remaining baseball days in the bush leagues—where you get free bus rides from one town to another?

Ferraro was the "regular" third baseman for the Brewers in 1972. Certainly 115 of 162 games should give anybody No. 1 priority on the job. He was hitting .296 on June 11, then went into a tailspin, levelled off and finished .255—midway in the American League. This is an era when a .250 average is a badge of distinction in major league baseball.

You know who the Brewers are playing at third base these days—John Vukovich, who was part of the Don Money deal with the Phillies.

Any baseball buff can tell you that the New York Yankee broadcasters are house shills, like the rest of their brethern in this period of TV baseball. But seldom have Messrs. Phil Rizzuto, Bill White and Frank Messer been known to ridicule anybody trying to make it in the majors.

But, this is what White had to say about Vukovich on a recent broadcast: "They're betting on whether he's going to hit .100 in this league . . . He might be better off going up there (to bat) with a copy of the Sporting News . . . he might do better without a bat and hope they hit him or walk him."

After striking out twice against the Yankees, Vukovich popped to third on what Rizzuto called a 'poor swing'. And this is the guy who has replaced Mike Ferraro at third base for the Brewers? The Milwaukee front office pretends to be thrilled by Vukovich's skills as a fielder. Bully for them! . . . Vukovich may yet become the first man in history to make it from home plate to first base with a glove.

The Yankees gave Mike Ferraro a 13-game spin at third base one year and then shipped him down to Syracuse (or is it up?) after he won the Dawson Award as top rookie in spring training. Ferraro aside, do you recall how many potential Pie Traynors the Yankees have tried to replace Clete Boyer with down through the years! Pretty impressive list . . . Jerry Kenny, Charlie Smith, Celerino Sanchez, Bill Robinson, Bobby Cox, Rich McKinney, Hal Lanier, John Kennedy and John Ellis. Have we missed any? First time one of these fellows checks into the Hall of Fame, let us know.

A couple of phone calls revealed the tortured reasoning of the Tacoma and Minnesota Twins front offices in their efforts to justify Ferraro's demotion to a utility, jack-of-all-trades, designated hitter role with the Pacific Coast League team.

Stan Naccarato, the general manager of the Tacoma Twins: "Ferraro has been alternating with Mike Brooks and Rich Renick (.172 average in 55 games in 1972) at second and third base. Mike was 5 for 15 his first 15 trips to the plate."

According to Naccarato, this makes Mike a "regular."

Among the other infielders with Tacoma is Bucky Guth, who played with the Twins all of last season and batted all of .218. Then there is Eric Soderholm, who was part-time third baseman with Minnesota in 1972, hitting .188 and is now Tacoma's regular shortstop. Add Charlie Storms and a guy by the name of George.

A nice enough man, Naccarato told us that if we wanted more informatiton on Minnesota's plans for Ferraro, we should call George Brophy, Director of Player Personnel in Minnesota (1-612-854-4040).

George Brophy rationalized Ferraro's transfer from the parent Twins to the Tacoma Twins.

"We weren't really settled on third base during the spring and we felt the more fellows we had, the better off we'd be late in the year."

"Mike is a pretty handy fellow to have around," explained Brophy. "No one in our organization except possibly Danny Thompson can hit behind the runner like Mike Ferraro." And in the next breath, "He (Mike) might be better off playing every day drawing a major league salary with Tacoma than sitting with us." How many times, how many times has Mike Ferraro heard that one before.

"You know," Brophy explained, "Mike is only 28 and could fit into our long range plans . . . We wouldn't have made the deal for him if we weren't interested in him."

Okay, Mike, got the message? Just sit tight and things will turn all good for you.

Thus, another chapter in the saga of Mike Ferraro. Mike's wife, Pam, put it rather succinctly the other day. "It's pretty discouraging," she said "We don't know from day to day what's going to happen next."

Off his 1972 season, Mike Ferraro deserved a better shake than he got from Milwaukee . . or Minnesota. There can be only ore explanation for this enduring mystery . . . somewhere along the way, he may have offended the baseball establishment. Unless you're a Denny McLain or a Dick Allen, it is the irredeemible sin.

Once the door is slammed in your face, it is seldom re-opened. As Casey Stengel likes to say, you could look it up by calling Carl Furillo, former National League batting champion, lifetme .299 hitter with the old Brooklyn Dodgers and one of the greatest right fielders in baseball history, who was happily 'retired' to building elevator shafts in skyscrappers . . . Or, Walter Kowalski of nearby Red Hook could tell you some interesting stories.

All of which renders Baseball Commissioner Bowie (For the Owners) Kuhn's panagyerics about baseball's democracy a mess of hypocritical pieties.

Peterson Upsets Fittipaldi for Pole

BARCELONA, Spain (UPI) — Ronnie Peterson of Sweden upset teammate and world champion Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil Saturday to win the pole position for today's Grand Prix of Spain Auto Race with a lap record of one minute, 21.8 seconds while reaching 103.7 miles an hour in the qualifying run.

Peterson, the 28-year-old No. 2 for the Lotus John Player special team who appeared on the Formula 1 scene only four years ago, will be paired in the front row with Denis Hulme of New Zealand.

Fittipaldi, plagued by mechanical trouble and switching to a spare car in the middle of the practice runs, was only seventh fastest among the 22 entries. The 1973 Grand Prix of Argentine and Brazil winner will start in the fourth row — a definite disadvantage on the twisting Monjuich Circuit where passing is risky.

Peterson lapping the 2.35-mile circuit in a record-shattering one minute 21.8 seconds to beat the track record of 1:25.1 set two years ago by the then world champion Jackie Stewart of Scotland. Records, however, are only formally recognized when set during a race.

"Peterson is the fastest man in Grand Prix racing today," said Alan Rees, racing manager of the Shadow team. "But he also pushes the car hardest."

Today's race will be over 75 laps or 176 miles.

Hulme, driving a Yardley McLaren, clocked 1:22.5 — almost a second slower than Peterson — to land in the front row for the opener of the European Grand Prix season.

Francois Cevert of France upset teammate Stewart, a three-time Spanish Grand Prix winner, to push his Tyrell-Ford into the number three position. He clocked 1:22.7 to Stewart's 1:23.2.

Californian Peter Revson drove a Yardley McLaren to a 1:23.4 clocking and Clay Regazzoni of Switzerland in a BRM showed 1:23.7 to form the next pair.

Fittipaldi was credited with a practice time of 1:23.0 Friday, but then changed to a spare car for Saturday's session after complaining about steering and suspension trouble. He clocked 1:23.7 in the car which he will race today and was placed in the fourth row, alongside Jackie Ickx of Belgium in a Ferrari who was credited with 1:24.1. Ickx brought a Ferrari home first last Wednesday in the 1,000 kilometers of Monza World Manufacturers Championship Race at Monza, Italy.

Sutton 3-Hits Pirates, 3-2

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Don Sutton fired a six-hitter in chilling 45-degree temperature and Joe Ferguson singled in what proved to be the winning run in the sixth inning Saturday as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates, 3-2.

Sutton, who struck out nine and walked one, evened his record at 2-2.

With the score tied 1-1 in the fifth, Ron Cey and Dave Lopes singled and both runners advanced on Sutton's sacrifice bunt. Billy Russell then singled home Cey but Lopes was cut down at the plate on a strong throw from Manny Saguillen.

Ferguson then singled home Willie Davis to make it 3-1 in the sixth.

The Pirates cut the lead to 3-2 in the eighth inning when Dave Cash singled, moved to third on Sanguillen's single, and scored when Al Oliver grounded out.

The Pirates had taken a 1-0 lead in the first when Cash led off with a single and scored when Steve Garvey dropped Al Oliver's fly an then made a throwing error to third base.

Monday Homer Stops Padres

CHICAGO (UPI) — Rick Monday homered as the leadoff man in the bottom of the first inning Saturday and winner Rick Reuschel and Jack Aker shutout as the Chicago Cubs blanked the San Diego Padres, 2-0.

Monday, who has now hit safely 12 times out of his last 26 at-bats for a robust .461 batting average, hit his fourth homer of the season off loser Fred Norman.

Monday opened the third with a double to left center and scored on Jim Hickman's bloop single.

Meanwhile, Reuschel became the first Cub pitcher to win two games this season although he failed to finish. Reuschel, who has lost once this year, gave up a leadoff single to Dave Hilton in the eighth. After throwing two straight balls to pinch-hitter Dave Marshall, Aker came in to and preserved the shutout as he got Marshall to ground into a double play to end the threat.

Bahnsen Outduels Tiant; Chisox Edge Bosox, 2-1

BOSTON (UPI) — Pat Kelly hammered out three doubles and scored both Chicago runs Saturday to give the White Sox a 2-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Kelly opened the first and third innings with doubles to left and scored both times. He doubled to right in the fifth inning and walked in the seventh for a perfect 3 for 3 day that lifted his batting average to .486 on 17 hits in 35 trips to the plate.

Carlos May followed the game-opening double with a sacrifice bunt and Kelly scored on Dick Allen's infield out. Bill Melton rapped the second of his two doubles to score Kelly in the third.

The Red Sox, who stranded 16 runners, got their run in the bottom of the third when Carlton Fisk doubled home Luis Aparicio, who had walked.

Stan Bahnsen picked up his third win in four decisions for the White Sox, but needed help from Terry Forster after serving up a base hit to Orlando Cepeda with one out in the seventh.

Forster pulled out of a jam by striking out Danny Cater with the bases loaded and two out in the eighth.

Luis Tiant took the loss despite 11 strikeouts. He is 2-2

Palmer Pitches Oriole Victory

OAKLAND (UPI) — Bobby Grich singled and scored Baltimore's first run, then homered in the third for the winning one Saturday as Jim Palmer outpitched Ken Holtzman to give the Orioles a 2-1 victory over the Oakland A's.

Palmer, who won 77 games over the past four seasons, struck out eight batters, walked one and gave up seven hits in recording his first triumph of 1973.

Holtzman gave up eight hits, struck out four and did not walk anyone and suffered his second defeat in five decisions.

Grich singled after one out in the first and scored on a long double to left by Tommy Davis. After two out in the third, he hit his first homer of the year and Palmer made it stand up the rest of the way as the Orioles snapped a three-game losing streak.

Gene Tenace doubled and scored on a single by Ray Fosse for Oakland's only run in the second.

Dean Carro had a New Paltz double in the field-shotput and discus — to give the Hawks a 6-1 margin in that department. John Shuit, who took the pole vault with a leap of 12 feet, 3 inches, was the only Kings winner in the field events.

Piniella's 3-Run Double Sinks Tigers for Royals

DETROIT (UPI) — Lou Piniella drove in three runs with a two-out double on a 3-2 pitch in the seventh inning Saturday to give the Kansas City Royals a 7-4 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Loser John Hiller, 0-1, who had choked off a four-run rally in the sixth, gave up a walk to Fran Healy, a double to Fred Patek and a walk to Cookie Rojas before leaving with the bases loaded and none out.

On Patek's double, Detroit lost a chance to get Healy at third when the ball and Willie Horton both arrived at the same time and both collided with Duke Sims, who was warming up Dave Lemanczyk in the bullpen. Horton had trouble picking up the ball and barely missed getting Healy at third.

Tom Timmerman got Amos Otis, who had doubled home two runs in the sixth with his third hit of the game, to force Healy at the plate, before Fred Scherman came in and slipped a third strike past John Mayberry. But Piniella broke the tie by slamming Scherman's 3-2 groove off the 365-foot numbers in left center.

Murcer's '2' Pace Yankees

NEW YORK (UPI) — The New York Yankees unloaded four two-run homers Saturday, including a pair by Bobby Murcer, to overpower the Minnesota Twins 11-3 behind the six-hit pitching of George Medich.

Matty Alou and Graig Nettles, a pair of off-season acquisitions, also connected for two-run blasts as the Yankees hit four homers in the game for the first time since last July 21. Murcer, who drove in a career high of five runs, got the Yankees off to a 2-0 lead in the first when he homered off Jim Kaat into the rightfield bullpen following a two-out double by Alou. The Yankees centerfielder homered again in the seventh after a single by Alou and drove in his final run with a single during the a three-run rally in the eighth.

Alou, who collected four hits, had his first homer as a Yankee in the third following a single by Roy White and Nettles belted his third homer of the season after a single by designated hitter Jim Ray Hart in the sixth. Nettles' home run was his first at Yankee Stadium this season.

Medich pitched hitless ball over the first four innings and allowed only one hit over the first five before the Twins got to him for single runs in the sixth and seventh. Larry Hisle tripled and scored on a sacrifice fly by Rod Carew for Minnesota's first run in the sixth, and Steve Braun hit his first home run of the year in the seventh.

The Twins got another run in the ninth on an error by Nettles, a single by Braun and a sacrifice fly by Danny Thompson.

Knicks-Celts at '7'

BOSTON (UPI) — The "gutsy" Boston Celtics and the determined New York Knicks clash here this afternoon in the seventh and deciding game of the National Basketball Association's Eastern Conference championship series.

The Celtics, all but written off last Sunday when they dropped a double overtime, 117-110, decision to fall behind three games to one, regained the home court advantage when they stunned the Knicks, 110-100, Friday night in New York's Madison Square Garden.

Today's game, which starts at 2:10 p.m., will attract a capacity crowd of 15,320 at Boston Garden and a national television audience. The winner moves on to the NBA championship series against the Los Angeles Lakers, Western Conference winners.

"This is a gutsy team," Boston Coach Tom Heinsohn said of his club Saturday. "They played good, smart basketball to get back into this series. But we're not going to live on these wins —we've got to win today.

"We don't need any adjustments, we just have to play our game," New York Coach Red Holzman said. "We'll go up to Boston and find out just how good we are."

The Celtics were greeted by more than 1,000 cheering fans as they reached Logan Airport about 2 a.m. Saturday. Later in the day more than 5,000 people jammed Boston Garden in search of tickets for Game No. 7.

"There's no way we're supposed to lose at home." Celtics' guard Don Chaney said. "We've come too far for that."

Albany State Routs Hawks In SUNY Tennis Meet

ALBANY — With No. 1 player Danny Forer trapped in class because of a misunderstanding, New Paltz State tennis team suffered a SUNY 8-1 rout at the hands of Albany State's powerful Great Danes. It was State's first loss in three starts.

"We probably wouldn't have beaten them," quipped Coach Bob Durkin, "but it could have been closer." Forer went to class under the impression the match had been postponed. And Albany held off until the last moment before notifying the Hawks the match would be played.

New Paltz's only victory came in the No. 1 doubles where Jerry Lazar and Ken McGrady rallied from an opening set loss to defeat Albany's No. 1 combo, 2-6, 7-6, 7-6, winning tie-breakers in the last two sets.

The results:

(Singles)

Ben Forest (A) defeated Amos Hedrych, 6-4, 5-7, 6-1; George Burke (A) over Jerry Lazar, 6-0, 6-1; George Lemeran (A) over Ken McGrady, 6-1, 6-4.

Al Weinberg (A) over Peter Birnham, 6-2, 6-4; Ken Fiskin (A) over Bob Williams, 6-0, 6-0; Al Connel (A) over John Kulikowski, 6-3, 6-0.

(Doubles)

Lazar-McGrady (NP) over Forrest-Burke, 2-6, 7-6, 7-6; Diskin-Connell (A) over Hedrych-Birnham, 6-4, 6-1; Leo Sturricht-Steven Taylor (A) over Williams-Kulikowski, 6-1, 6-1.

Says Bill Reilly

Call It the Modern Swing Because It's All That

By STEVE KANE

KINGSTON

Glancing at one of those yellowed photographs of Francis Ouimet watching one of his shots sail down the fairway really makes you wonder. There stands one of the great names of the game in action, with only the very tip of the right toe touching the ground, the club resting awkwardly over the back of his right shoulder, his hands so close to his mouth he could bite himself without moving anything but his jaw.

Contrast that with an instant replay of Jack Nicklaus straining the limits of his extra stiff shaft and tailored doubleknits with the biggest swing this side of the Playboy Club.

Would you call the newer version Square-to-Square?

"Well," begins Bill Reilly, "call it modern swing" and having surpassed that small hurdle in terminology, the head professional at the Wiltwyck Country Club continues:

"The early golf swing was a series of corrections. It was all based on an extreme rotation of parts, and the clubhead faced the target for only a very small distance. That meant that perfect timing was incredibly necessary to hit the ball."

Reilly labels that period the Pre-Hogan Era. "They developed their swings then without the help of the visual aides we have today — they had no way of seeing what they looked like. Also there were just generally fewer players and the sport lacked an abundance of the better athletes.

"Ben Hogan is the father of the modern swing," Reilly says. "He took every component part by part, hit 10,000 balls with each and threw away what wasn't necesssary. And he did it all without an encouragement. I don't think he was finished until he was past 50. Today his swing is at its best, but he's unable to use it."

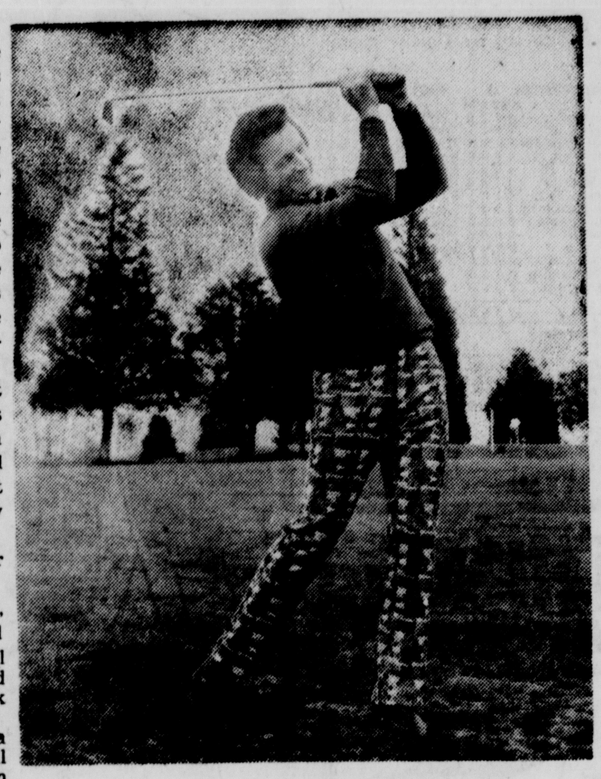
No one disputes the superiority of the present day method of hitting a golf ball. You'd sooner hear a cry of "bring back gutta percha!" What makes it better, Reilly maintains, is simplicity.

"The modern swing is so much less complicated. It reduces the need for timing, it's easier to groove, and a player is able to accelerate through the ball. It's square-to-square, but the guys that wrote that book spent 400 pages explaining what they could have done in three. They made a very complicated thing about something that's whole point was simplicity. But then again, who'd pay $7.95 for three pages?"

Reilly breaks the method down into three parts, the first of which is sighting on the target. "That's the bigest problem people have — they forget to look where they're going."

Part two concerns the grip "You set the clubface square to the target then you hold it. The type of grip you use is an individual thing. I usually don't recommend the interlocking grip, the overlapping or 10-finger grip is the best for most people."

Part three is slightly harder to define. It deals with lower body action. "Doing the first two stages corectly necessitates doing all the rest the right way. The action of the big muscles of the legs and back beginners find natural. Veterans find it harder because they're doing something different."



BILL REILLY

Reilly feels keeping the golf swing on such a simple level aids learning and performance. "I've got the 13-year-old kids out there," he says motioning to the driving range, "that don't know how to hit a golf ball off-line."

The success of this whole method revolves around a "simple" fact. The golfer with such a swing is guiding his clubface directly at the target for distance about three times as long as did Ouimet and his friends.

much as anyone to the development of the modern swing. He's the man who took sequence pictures and discovered this difference in the clubhead path." With it, the golfer has a greater possible impact zone with a much greater margin of error.

Schloss also helped develop the lightweight steel shaft, an innovation Reilly feels is the greatest technological improvement in the game.

Adjustment on the modern are all made before the ball is hit. Open the clubface to fade the ball, close it slightly to hit a draw. "To keep the ball low," Reilly says, "move the legs more into the shot. To hit it higher, keep the hands back."

But he cautions the average player shouldn't attempt such finesse, particularly the latter two. "Even the pros don't bother with keeping the ball low in the wind anymore."

One of the major criticisms of this method was the charge that excessive strength was required to play it well. "My ball stays out to the right!" cried Pete Pronator.

"That's not true," counters Reilly. "You use your legs with this swing, and everybody's legs are stronger than their arms or wrists. Gene Littler is living proof. He had an operation on his arm and chest, yet he came right back and won a tournament — because he hits with his legs."

Reilly terms Hogan as the best "striker of the ball" he's ever seen. He rates Nicklaus superior along with George Knudson, Lee Trevino and a South African, Trevor Wilkes. "They don't play much outside their own country, but South Africa has a lot of top golfers."

On the local front he rates Harvey Bostic as the possessor of the best swing with heavy competition for several Wiltwyck juniors. "The kids haven't had a chance to learn anything wrong."

Bob Watson--Hobo with a Big Bat

By DARRELL MACK
UPI Sports Writer

HOUSTON (UPI) — They call him Bull, but he's really a hobo with a big bat.

First, he's catching, then he's in left field and next he's at first base.

One thing that hasn't changed for the Houston Astros' Bob Watson, though, is the plate, where he has been swinging a 38-ounce bat at a .330-plus clip on a hitting streak nearing 20 games.

Watson, in his fifth major league year at age 27, was considered a key player to Houston's chances of winning the National League West title this year. If he could catch, that would give the Astros power behind the plate and allow Tommie Agee to play left field and lead off.

Watson signed as a catcher in 1965, but mangled his right shoulder running into a wall in Greenville, S.C., later that summer and his arm never was strong enough for him to return to catching. He has played the outfield and first base since, but he still preferred to catch.

Manager Leo Durocher decided to give him a chance and all this spring Watson spent extra hours five days a week with John Edwards, the Astros' regular catcher, to learn the refinements he had missed in the minors. He caught 90 per cent of the team's spring games.

"I think I did better than a lot of people expected," Watson said. "I think if we weren't a pennant contender, I would be the catcher. But we are a contender and we can't afford some mistakes I might make.

"I still might catch if Johnny doesn't hit and Leo wants to put Agee in the outfield," Watson said. "I haven't given up my gloves or the desire to catch."

Watson's locker in the clubhouse has four catcher's mitts, two outfielders' gloves and a first baseman's glove. But when the season opened it was the outfielder's glove Watson dug out and it was back to left field, his position last year.

Then Lee May, the team's slugging first baseman, was injured sliding into second in Los Angeles April 16 and, after 11 games in left field, Watson became the team's first baseman. With each position change, he had to alter his style of throwing and concentrate on the peculiar tasks of the new job.

But it didn't bother his hitting.

"I never do concentrate on hitting," Watson said. "It's always been a part of the game I never worried about. I know I can get the base hits.

"My big problem is defense. I always struggled at it. I can't relax at either first base or in the outfield. I have to concentrate on being in the right spot and what to do on every play. It only comes natural when I'm catching."

His continual battle to become a big league catcher is only the latest of a series of challenges for Watson. He fought his way out of the Watts area of Los Angeles and, with the help of his high school coach, got a crack at baseball.

Then his career almost ended when he slammed into that wall in Greenville. Only an operation by Dr. Robert Kurland, noted Los Angeles surgeon, kept him in the game. Kurland also has operated on Sandy Koufax, Don Drysdale, Jerry West, Maury Wills, Wilt Chamberlain and others.

The next battle was to prove to the Astros that he could hit and could play some place. He bounced up and down four years—once threatening to quit when they sent him to Class AA ball—until finally his options ran out in 1970.

"We got Tommy Davis and Joe Pepitone and I figured they got both of my positions (left field and first base) so I would be traded or put in the draft," Watson said.

But both Davis and Pepitone turned out to play big roles in Watson's career. Watson said Davis helped him with his hitting more than any other person in pro ball.

Pepitone helped indirectly.

"Pepi was hit in the elbow with a pitch in Atlanta and I got to play and I hit four homes runs in three days and I've been playing since," Watson said. "We came back home and they wanted to give him (Pepitone) a roommate. There was a big dispute and the next thing I knew he quit."

Watson and young John Mayberry, now with the Kansas City Royals, platooned at first for a while, but Mayberry, only 20, couldn't hit so Watson got the job. He moved to left field in 1971 and 1972, hitting .312 last season.

He's after a .320 average with 20 home runs and 90-100 runs batted in this season. And he still wants to catch.

Mets at West Point

The New York Mets, world champions in 1969 and a leading contender for National League East honors this season, will visit West Point Monday afternoon for their "every-other-year" exhibition with the Army baseball team. Game time at Doubleday Field is 3 p.m.

The Mets, who have played Army on four previous occasions and have yet to allow the Cadets a single run, will be between series with the Atlanta Braves and the Cincinnati Reds, defending National League champions. The weekend series with the Braves was set for Atlanta, while Cincinnati begins an eight-game home stand at Shea Stadium with a night game Wednesday, May 2.

Army's friendly relationship with professional baseball teams began in 1914 when the immortal John J. McGraw brought his New York Giants to West Point as a favor to Army coach Sammy Strang Nicklin, one of McGraw's former pupils. Since that initial meeting, the Cadets have played such professional teams as the New York Yankees, the Brooklyn Dodgers, the San Francisco Giants and the Montreal Royals, in addition to the Mets.

The first Army-Mets game was played in 1963, with the New Yorkers taking home a 3-0 decision. They have made the trip to West Point three times since, winning 8-0 in 1965, 4-0 in 1967 and 8-0 in 1971. Last year the New York Yankees, who alternate with The Mets in the annual visit, handed the Cadets a 10-1 reversal.

There is no admission charge, and all seating will be on a first come basis. In the event of rain or wet grounds, the game will be postponed one day to Tuesday, May 1.

Stroudsburg Rates Bill Zeeh No. 1 Man

EAST STROUDSBURG, Pa.—Make no mistake about it, says East Stroudsburg State tennis Coach Charlie Wolbers, the No. 1 man on team is Bill Zeeh of Kingston.

Wolbers was clearing up some confusion created by a recent Daily Freeman article which said Zeeh, the former Kingston High School and Ulster County Community College star, was playing second and third singles this year. That information had been obtained from Stroudsburg's Sports Information Director Pete Nevins.

But Wolbers pointed out this week that the only time Zeeh did not play No. 1 singles was when his team competed on a clay court, a surface on which one of Stroudsburg's foreign players virtually grew up.

"Bill is a real scrambler with plenty of savvy," said Wolbers. "He's a real plus for our tennis team and he's our No. 1 man."

The strong Stroudsburg team, 6-4, on a recent Southern swing, returned to score impressive shutout victories over Lehigh and Winchester Teachers, 9-0. The team's overall record is 9-3 at this writing and Zeeh has won 9 of his first 12 singles matches.

East Stroudsburg is a co-favorite with Edinboro in the conference championships May 4-5 at Bloomsburg.

AL DEFOREST of Kingston was a member of the 23-man Norwich (Vt.) University rugby team which recently completed a five-game series in England. The ruggers departed from Montreal April 12 for London where they took on five of the top teams in the area during a 10-day visit.

Their first match was against Hendon, a club that was once home base for Norwich coach Rufus Boyett. Al is a sophomore at Norwich, majoring in business adminstration and is also a varsity letter winner in swimming. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. Harlow F. DeForest of Kingston.

NICK ASCIENZO, the former Kingston High School pitcher, is apparently through as a Albany State U. pitcher but quickly won the first base position. He batted .400 through his first seven games.

Ascienzo suffered a shoulder injury in spring of 1972. He started the first game of a doubleheader against Binghamton this season but aggravated the old ailment in the third inning. The Great Danes are off to a 6-1 start in the SUNYAC and 10-4 overall.

Werner Kolln, who won three letters in basketball at Albany, is a member of the golf varsity which has had a slow start due to poor spring weather.

DALE WHITMAN of Kingston, a junior defenseman, is a member of the 1973 Ithaca College junior varsity lacrosse team which opened its season April 14 against nationally ranked North Country Community College. The Ithacans will play a home series with Corning CC, another national powerhouse, the Hobart Jayvees and Manlius-Pebble School.

A phys ed major at IC, Whitman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sanford O. Whitman of Kingston.

DR. WILLIAM STRAUB, Associate Professor of physical Education at Ithaca College, has been selected to conduct a state-wide investigation of the status of lifetime sports instruction in New York State secondary schools.

In 1967, while a member of Dr. Grover's staff, Dr. Straub conducted a similar investigation which revealed that New York State schools offered more lifetime sports, such as golf, bowling, tennis and badminton, than the average number offered throughout the nation's other school systems.

Kickers Face Colombiana '11'

MORGAN HILL

The two Old Pros — Winnie Sodermann and Reiner Schwebel — will be missing from the lineup, when the Kingston Kickers host Columbia of New York in a League Division soccer match today at 3 p.m. at Oehler's Soccer Field.

"We'll miss them," says Manager Jim Reinhardt, referring to Soddemann and Schwebel, "but I think the young lads will pull us through." Meaning, of course, newly-added Richie Bush and Bernie Schaeffer.

Bush comes to the Kickers by way of Kingston High, Ulster County Community College and Keene State in New Hampshire. Schaeffer, a member of Rosendale's well known athletic family, played soccer at New Paltz State.

Kingston leads the League Division South with the best record in both divisions — 10 wins, one loss and a tie, but Manager Reinhardt is holding them too cheaply.

"Most of them are South-American born and trained," said Reinhardt "and on a given day they can give you trouble."

In other League Division action, Stamford visits Schwaben; Yonkers is at Poughkeepsie and West New York, leader of the North Division, hosts Ukrainian Youth.

The standings:

Black and Gold Contest Ends Army Spring Drills

Army's spring football sessions come to a close Saturday afternoon (May 5) with the annual intrasquad game at Michie Stadium. Kickoff at 2 o'clock will find, as tradition has it, the Army Black taking on the Army Gold.

When the first of the 20 prescribed practices began in early April, head coach Tom Cahill pointed to three major areas he wanted to concentrate on the most. These were the identification of personnel with a strong emphasis on the newcomers; the testing of offenses and defenses; and any experimenting that might be done.

With the final countdown rapidly approaching, coach Cahill views the spring sessions "as time well spent." He concedes the Cadets may be short on varsity experience, what with the departure of 27 lettermen and the return of only 16 who helped carve a 6-4 record last year, but, by the same token, feels they are strong on potential.

"I've been very pleased with the results of our spring practices to date," he said, "and am anxiously awaiting the spring game to see what we do under actual game conditions. I've been particularly impressed with the maturing of some personnel who didn't play much last year, as well as several promising players up from the plebe ranks. Believe me, we have solid potential to put two sound units on the field come September," he added.

In Ulster County Streams

ST. REMY

The State Environmental Conservation Department will have stocked 18,897 brook and brown trout in Ulster County streams by April 30, Fish Chairman Fred Gentile reported at the April meeting of the Federated Sportsmen's Clubs of Ulster County at the Lake Katrine Rod and Gun Club clubhouse.

The stocking will be completed Monday when 11,260 eight-inch browns will be stocked in three area streams — Esopus Creek, 9,165; Stony Clove Brook, 705; Woodland Valley Stream, 940. Total number of browns to be released is 11,967, with 6,930 browns unloaded. Heaviest stocking of brooks was in Sandburg Creek (1370), Plattekill Creek (1080) and Sawkill Creek (1360).

The federation also pledged support of the National Hunting and Fishing Day ceremonies to be hosted by the Wawarsing Sportsmen's Association. In his newsletter to the membership, Federation president Frederick G. Faerber III also alerted the member clubs to the Sept. 30 benefit shoot for Muscular Dystrophy. "All profits of this shoot at trap clubs of the federation will be turned over to Muscular Dystrophy," Faerber said. "We need the membership's support on this."

Faerber also noted that Atlantic Salmon Smolt's 3000 have been stocked in the Neversink Reservoir during the last week of April. The project was undertaken by the Sullivan County Federation but fishing for these fish will not be allowed until 1975.

Gary Will, Fish and Wildlife Technician of the Conservation Department, gave a colored slide presentation and talk on his trapping efforts and habits of the black bear in the Catskill Mountain area, where bear takes have declined in recent years . . . Application of the Mid-Hudson Gun Club for membership was approved . . . Next meeting of the Federation is scheduled May 10 at Wawarsing.

Herb Doig, Director of the Division of Fish and Wildlife, has advised that some turkey hunters may not receive their free permits by the time the spring season opens on Monday, May 7. They will be able to hunt, however, he has assured them.

The problem was caused by a delay in receiving the permits from the printer. Mailing of permits began as soon as the permits were received, but they are not all expected to be in the hands of applicants until after the season begins.

Any hunter who applied for his permit by April 30 but has not received it may hunt during the first week of the season without having it in his possession. Conservation officers will take the necessary information if hunters are found without a permit.

Spring turkey hunting in New York has been expanded this year to a 12-day season in all or parts of 19 counties. The season is open only on bearded wild turkeys and hunting hours are from sunrise to 10 a.m.

The walleye (pike-perch) season in the Ashokan Reservoir opens May 1 and will run until March 1, 1974. The season was changed to May 1 from April 1, beginning in 1972. The new season was incorporated to protect the walleye spawning run which usually begins during the latter part of March and extends through April.

The decline of walleye population in the Ashokan Reservoir over the past few years prompted this change, and the New Paltz Regional Office of the Conservation Department thinks the additional protection will allow walleye abundance to increase to former standards.

Browsing at the KAL

Doing Research . . . Many Answers

By NINA WERBALOWSKY

What is the captial of Peru? How many legs has a spider? What metal conducts heat best? What's AT&T stock likely to do this year?

To find the answers to these, and an infinite number of other questions in fields such as law, social sciences, stocks and bonds, education, publications biographies, religions, music, sports, literature, local history and many others, step right down to our Kingston Area Library.

We can all be proud that our library has been designated as the Ulster County Reference Center for the Mid-Hudson Libraries System. What it means is if you have something to research or just want some answers to questions on anything at all, the library probably can supply the facts.

If you don't know where to begin, speak right up and ask for help from any one of the following: Mildred Buddington, Mary Elmore, Sandra Ostoyich, Ann Moore and Caroline Matzen, professional research librarians; and Elaine Marcus, well-trained and experienced staff member.

If you can't come to the library in person, you might query on the phone. The library offers this question-and-answer department as part of its service to the community.

To get an idea of what's available, let's browse through the shelves in the basement reference room. We won't be able to look over every book since there are approximately 2,000 books, back issues of magazines and early newspapers on microfilm.

But we do find four complete encyclopedia's of general information as well as the Encyclopedia of World Art and the Encyclopedia of Education. There are shelves of reference books on stocks and bonds, including Moody's and Value Line.

There are fully 17 volumes of the International Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences, discussing topics such as adult education, agriculture, Asian society and biographies of outstanding social scientists, and that's only part of the first volume.

Dictionaries abound. In the 13 volumes of the Oxford English Dictionary, you can find out everything you always wanted to know about any word. Then we come to separate encyclopedias on boating, fishermen, hunters, baseball, football and literary criticism.

On the upper floor, you can find telephone books from all over the United States.

One of the most interesting sections to the college-bound student and his parents is the large collection of college information. It featues subject coverage (what schools teach certain subjects) and geographical area coverage as well as regular college catalogs. In theory, then, if you wanted to study marine biology and stay in the east, you would be able to pick out the eastern schools teaching this speciality.

In one of the volumes of quotations, I found this on reading: "Then I thought of reading — the nice and subtle happiness of reading . . . This joy not dulled by age, this polite and unpunishable vice, this selfish serence, life-long intoxication."

But getting back to the questions posed in the first paragraph, the answers are, in order: Lima, eight, silver, and heaven only knows.

Appraisers Differ On Club's Assets

KINGSTON — Two appraisers, testifying in Ulster County Supreme Court late last week as to the worth of the assests of the Wiltwyck Country Club, are $700,000 apart in their estimates.

The value of the assets is in question as the result of 15 Wiltwyck shareholders who have indicated they wish to sell their shares back to the club's new corporation and have petitioned in Supreme Court asking for a reevaluation of their shares.

Gerald Griffin Jr., real estate appraiser, testified that the value of the 300-member corporation is about $1 million while Walter Donnaruma, another area appraiser testified that the assets are worth $300,000.

Harold Finkle, Kingston stock broker, also testified that the market value of the shares in Wiltwyck is $1,500 each. He said that only 16 shares have been traded since 1965.

The 15 shareholders asking for the reevaluation are among thsoe who dissented in 1970 in the reorganization of the club from a membership corporation to a "not for profit" corporation. They have retained Charles Gaffney as counsel and brought the proceeding under corporation law.

Club president Thomas J. Plunket, Kingston lawyer, has retained an Albany attorney, Thomas Conneally, as trial counsel for the corporation.

Debts outstanding amount to a little in excess of $150,000, according to presiding Justice Harold Hughes who has given counsel for both sides three weeks to submit briefs.

The club, located off Lucas Avenue Ext. includes in excess of 50 acres with an 18-hole golf course, water holes, pool and clubhouse.

Getting It Together

IMPROVISATIONS: I just lovewas great, the fashion parade was delightful, (even if the Rev. Mr. Morton didn't model). I'm just sorry that more people did not support the youth of their church for such a fine program — I have heard nothing but the best about all of the events of the conference, and it goes to show that we can do anything we want to do, if we really work together — Mrs. Earline Patrice of Poughkeepsie was honored recently, and now bears the title of 'First Lady of Poughkeepsie" — Freida Lyles and her Pacesetters 4-H Club are really "working out" with their keen planning for the Miss Black Teenage America Pageant on May 13 at Arlington High School in Poughkeepsie. Tickets are available and I wish all my readers would go. There are always complaints that nothing is ever happening; but then when something is going on nobody supports it. So, let's get on the ball, call 452-4199 and make arrangements to be there. Time is for 7 p.m. and knowing Freida, it will start at 7. Kingston has two lovely contestants, and they want to know that Kingston cares.

JUST THINKING: I have fussed and yelled and screamed, all about children. I am madder right now than I have ever been, because I have just been informed that a child, a young girl, was being returned to a nearby institution, from a visit to New York City, in a bus with "proper supervision," was burned on the face with a lit "punk" by another child. Now I ask you, what kind of supervision was present? Suppose the thing had been poked in the child's eye? I personally am not as resentful toward the child who did this rotten thing as I am toward the adults on the bus who were in charge. One more question, how can you supervise a busload of difficult children from the front of the bus?

APRIL BLACK HISTORY HIGHLIGHTS: Fisk University opened in Nashville April 20, 1865. Victor Sejour, an American Black, born free in New Orleans in 1817, became one of France's foremost dramatists. — In April of 1762, Anthony Benezet published an account of African Civilization and Culture—

JOANNE AND LEW KOCH

A New Approach To Discipline— Logical Consequences

By JOANNE and LEW KOCH

To spank or not to spank?
To yell or not to yell?
To give orders or to give reasons?

These are the questions. Discipline—it's breaking down and how do you replace it? How do you keep order in the family without exercising old-fashioned authority?

Here is one approach that we've tried with 7-year-old Lisa and 5-year-old Rachel. It's Logical Consequences.

The idea here is that the child must be left to suffer the consequences of her own actions. Rachel and Lisa are late for school. In the morning rush to get out of the house, Rachel has forgotten her boots. Lisa her lunch.

Dr. Rudolph Dreikers, proponent of the logical consequences theory, would advise that Rachel be left to walk home in the rain. Though she might get wet feet this time, next time she won't forget her boots. Lisa will be hungry this time, but next time she won't forget her lunch. I decided to try this brand of logic.

All day long I restrain myself from running to school with Lisa's lunch and Rachel's boots. The rain comes down just before kindergarten lets out. Rachel walks in with rain-soaked tights, not the least bit perturbed about her soggy shoes, a big smile on her face.

"Thanks for letting me go without boots today, Mommy. Why didn't I have to wear boots today, anyway?"

"Logical consequences, Rachel."

"Who's that?"

I served lunch to Rachel and Joshua, thinking how miserable poor Lisa must be without any lunch in her tummy. I open Lisa's lunch box and spread the contents on a birthday plate left over from her last party. I decided to bake cookies, too, just to make her feel a little better.

Lisa comes in at 3:15.

"Hi mom! Sherry had a steak sandwich today and two peanut butter cups. She shared it with me. I'll just have a cookie. How come you didn't bring my lunch over."

"Logical consequences."

"What's that?"

"A new idea that parents should pretend not to care what happens to their kids when they get wet or hungry and kids should care enough about being wet or hungry never to forget their boots or their lunches."

"That doesn't make sense, Mommy, because kids don't mind going without boots and there's always someone who has extra candy and potato chips so they don't go hungry and the Mommies worry all day.

"That's very logical."

"What's logic?"

"Logic is something humans invented but can't seem to use on each other."

"Can I go to Madeline's house now?"

"Only if you wear your boots. It's still wet out."

"Oh, come on Mom. It isn't that bad."

"Lisa, get those boots on now!"

"O.K., O.K., don't shout. I'm getting them."

Shouting sounds awful, makes you feel guilty later and is undemocratic. It has only one thing to recommend it. It works.

A Taste of Italy

By DOROTHY A. NAREL

There isn't a table in Italy where at 12 o'clock one doesn't find a dish of hot spaghetti. Italians love pasta! And so do a lot of other people. They may call it by different names but it is all tasty, easy to prepare pasta.

When it comes to women, there isn't a spot in the world where the name Gina Lollobrigida doesn't remind one of Italy. Different symbols and tastes of the same country.

It was inevitable that "Bella Gina" should decide at a certain point to invent a "special" dish of spaghetti. Exercising that particular creativeness that distinguishes her, and that particular art which is typical of all genuinely real women.

Popularity and admiration, to a point of fanaticism, surround Gina wherever she goes. Whether it is to Via Condotti or Fifth Avenue not to mention France where they have recently coined an adjective "Lollobrigidienne" which was entered into common usage for describing a hilly countryside.

This extraordinary success has not changed the star we are told, not has it made her lose her gusto for cooking traditional dishes or creating new ones.

Gino di Grandi of Campagnano di Roma in Italy wrote to The Freeman and gave us the story behind Gina's new recipe. It happend on the occasion of a dinner she gave recently for her many friends to celebrate the success of her book MY ITALY which was completely sold out in five days. For this occasion she invented a delicious dish of spaghetti which was immediately termed "Alla Lollobrigida" by her guests who comprised all of the Rome that counts: aristocrats, artists and men of government.

Gina's "Spaghettata" or spaghetti feast met with such success that she had to rush to the kitchen to prepare another abundant batch.

A double success then, cook as well as photographer, is what the actress has chalked up for herself. Author-critic Alberto Moravia has written that Lollobrigida's book could be defined as "your revenge against the camera which, for many years, was the means of expression of directors through your image and which now has become a means of expressing yourself through the images of the world."

Spaghetti Alla Gina Lollobrigida

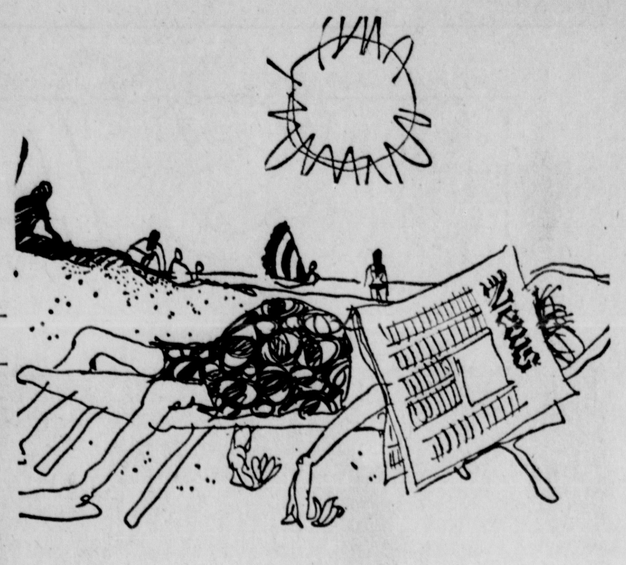
INGREDIENTS: (For four persons)

1 Pound spaghetti
6 ounces sliced bacon
4 tablespoons olive oil
4 tablespoons pecorino (or romano) grated cheese
4 eggs (yolks and whites)
1 ounce liquore galliano
1 ounce salt
Pepper (to taste)

Preparation:

Cut bacon into one inch pieces and cook over low heat. When the bacon begins to crisp remove the excess fat from skillet and sprinkle the bacon with Liquore Galliano and continue to saute for about two minutes. Then set this aside keeping it warm.

While spaghetti is cooking in four quarts of boiling water and one ounce of salt, put (in the deep serving dish you will later take to the table) the eggs, olive oil, cheese, pepper and bacon (with the Liquore Galliano in which it was sauted) and blend. Now add the hot drained spaghetti (along with two tablespoons of its water) to the mixture in the serving dish. Mix well and serve immediately.



New Style: Go Native The Condominium Way

By ROBERT COCHNAR

MARBELLA, Spain — (NEA) — Renting a country or beach cottage for a few weeks every year is practically the classic vacation for Americans. The more adventurous families are doing the same thing — but in places like Spain, France, Hawaii and the Caribbean.

The twist on the traditional holiday is known as a condominimum apartment and this, plus more economical air fare, has literally opened the world to vacationing Americans. If two weeks in the mountains is refreshing, consider what two weeks on the Costa del Sol, can be, at not much more money than a domestic resort.

For example, a family of five can spend a fortnight in a two-bedroom apartment overlooking an extraordinarily pretty Mediterranean harbor near Marbella for about $1.800.

This includes round-trip airfare and the unlimited use of a car, not to mention the opportunity for living an entirely different life style.

The trend toward apartment hotels is more the result of conomic facts of life than nything else. The traditional esort hotel aboard may have een better days, perhaps ecause of its inability to offer the de luxe services (room service, organized events, etc.) its high prices seem to demand.

Then, too, Europe and the Caribbean are finding it more and more difficult to train — and keep — competent staffs, a situation paralleled in the United States.

Finally, Americans are demanding much more than a small, uncomfortable, room in a bustling hotel, which is about all one can expect in a traditional resort operation.

The notion of moving into a new and commodious apartment suite, perhaps directly facing the beach, perhaps in a high-rise building, filled with tasteful furniture, is somehow more attractive than a room with bath.

Also, eating habits have changed. To be charged $3 for a tepid breakfast, or to be required to eat in a hotel, no longer appeals to many vacationers who have adopted a more informal approach to the couse of holiday events.

Outfits like Condomart International, a New York-based sales and marketing company which represents 30 apartment hotels at resorts in Europe, the United States, Hawaii Mexico and Canada, have been able to offer vacation "packages" to Americans which take total advantage of the condominium phenomenon.

A condominium is an apartment which is purchased outright by the buyer. Because of advantageous mortgage arrangements, the buyer can make considerable tax savings.

The advantage for the condominium vacationer is that the apartment owner contracts with the developer to allow his apartment to be rented to vacationers, usually for 11 months of the year, if possible.

The owner receives rental income on his apartment and, as an extra attraction, he gets to use his property rent-free for at least a month. Obviously, the owner must consider his apartment as an investment rather than as a second home to be visited at will. Still, condominium developers point out that an apartment is one of the few financial investments that the investor can actually enjoy.

For the vacationer, someone else's investment is a real boon. For example, six people may stay in a two-bedroom apartment at Le Corbier in the French Alps for less than $5 per day per person. The daily rate for a family of four at the Banus Harbor apartments near Marbella is less than $6 per person.

Says Marc Inman, president of Condomart, "Basically, a condominium hotel offers a home away from home where vacationers can move around without the worry of constantly dining out or being forced into a single hotel food plan. After all, isn't it sometimes more fun to shop in a local market stall or scoop periwinkles on the beach and prepare them yourself?"

Inman believes that the condominium vacation concept is a complete new industry, "something like motels were 20 years ago."

Travelers who are accustomed to conventional hotels are learning that the hotel - to - tour - bus - to - nightclub routine tends to isolate tourists from the foreign atmosphere. A hotel in, say, Italy, is not unlike one in Hawaii. Living in an apartment, even for two weeks, inevitably results in a close contact with the permanent residents.

"After all," said one young woman after spening her vacation in an apartment on the Costa del Sol, "you really don't feel like a touris when you're arguing with a butcher over a cut of meat for tonight's dinner."

Mother Earth News today suggests we all go Chinese and for less than $20 a month.

Considering today's high cost of living, it sounds great. The author, John Shuttleworth, says that despite consumer boycotts, food prices in this country are likely to remain high for some time. Not so great.

Mother Earth does come out with some good ideas but it also means a switch in eating habits.

Companies Are in Need of Executive Women

DR. EVALYN S. GENDEL

There's a new reality in the minds of concerned company officers: the need for executive women. It has nothing to do with equal oppurtunity or quotas or tokenism. It's tied closely to good decision making and corporate sensitivity to consumer needs.

So if the business caters to the female consumer (and whose doesn't), the logical step is to bring in a qualified woman. But there's been some lag in placing women in prominent posts: three years ago, .07 percent of all board members were women. Today, that figure has inched up but is still less than one percent, hardly representative when fifty percent of the population falls into the feminine gender.

One by one companies are realizing the woman in the boardroom can make a valuable contribution. So it was perfectly logical that Kimberly-Clark, leading maker of feminine hygiene, health care and infant care products, sought a woman's guidance and counsel.

Dr. Evalyn Stolaroff Gendel, a petite brunette with an unwavering determination, is now officially a member of the board of directors. Her qualifications for this esteemed position are impresive.

She currently serves as director of the Division of Maternal and Child Health of the Kansas State Department of Health. She also teaches at the University of Kansas Medical School; she was trained in orthopedic surgery; serves as consultant to the President's Council on Physical Fitness; head of the board of Sex Information and Education Council in the United States and is an executive board member for the American Public Health Association.

Her professional and voluntary activities include membership in many national, state and local organizations related to health, medicine and education; she has worked with the deaf and blind and with handicapped children, and was a delegate to the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health.

Dr. Gendel began her career in fine arts on a scholarship, which lead to her interest in medical illustration. This allowed her to finance her own way through medical school. She is also a wife and mother of five children, the youngest of which is still in high school.

Speaking of her election to the board, Dr. Gendel comments, "I hope that I can contribute to board decisions initially by learning and sharing ideas. It is my belief that a mixture of viewpoints encompassing those of men and women invariably results in a more complete picture of the problems to be addressed.

"I hope this signifies a trend in companies to include women in their day-to-day decisions about consumers interests. Women are capable of doing whatever they truly want to do if they investigate the areas open to them. I don't think this requires any special abilities, but rather a recognition of personal investment necessary to explore these new areas.

"Our culture hasn't supported the concept of career flexibility for women as well as for men. I am happy with the overall impact of the womens' movement because it calls attention to social and legal issues. I think the major implication, however, is that there are many choices open to women and they should all be considered without prejudice."

The Life Cycle Center, K-C's educational program for women, supports the concepts Dr. Gendel advocates. Her potential input to this valuable program is evident in her comments, "The need for education about human sexuality is a basic learning about life. The teaching of human growth and development must integrate sexuality. Adequate and accurate education leads to responsible interaction."

Thinking about her role as a wife and mother, Dr. Gendel says, "I was married while in medical school, and my husband encouraged me to continue with specialized training. We mutually agreed to 'hang loose' on how my career would affect our lives. Fortunately, the whole family likes this plan, although it doesn't mean there aren't stresses and strains on any women who combines work with family interaction and responsibility."

Dr. Gendel is a highly respected and vital member of every community, organization or advisory board on which she serves. Her company will feel the impact of her contribution.

Women have always been qualified to carry responsibilities in many areas and it is natural that large corporations are beginning to place them in decision-making levels and regarding them simply an individuals with knowledge and expertise.

DEAR ABBY: A couple, merely acquaintances of a few years, have dropped in to see us on three different occasions. They appear to be like other people, except for the husband.

He asks to take a bath the minute they step inside the door. The first time we thought nothing of it because they were on their way home from a day's trip in their car, even tho their home is only 5 miles from ours.

My wife and I have never been in their home but we understand it has all the conveniences of ours, including a tub and shower.

On two other occasions when they had come directly from their home, he again asked to take a bath. After the third bath I concluded that he must be some kind of a nut. Needless to say we have never returned their visits and probably never will.

What do you suppose makes our ordinary bathing facilities so fascinating that the husband cannot wait to use his own?

PERPLEXED IN SANTA ANA

DEAR PERPLEXED: I don't know, but I surely would have asked him after the second bath.

DEAR ABBY: My husband uses a very clever gimmick to get acquainted with pretty young women whenever we are on a vacation. He always carries a couple of cameras to make himself look like a real expert photographer, and when he sees a pretty girl, he compliments her on her figure, or face, or hair, and asks her if she would mind posing for a few pictures. This never fails. Then he offers to buy her a drink or lunch or something so he can get better acquainted with her. (Of course he takes her name and address so he can send her the picture later.)

Sometimes he doesn't even have any film in his camera. He's 45 years old and acts like a teen-ager. Would I be within my rights to introduce myself to some of these bathing beauties and spoil his fun?

SHUTTERBUG'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Certainly. But be sure you catch him before he "clicks."

Problems? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box No. 69700, L.A., Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Tony Perkins Relaxes in Hippie Clothes

By MARIAN CHRISTY

NEW YORK — It's a funny scene.

The West 21st Street townhouse — a prototype of the uninspired, sparsely furnished bachelor apartment — is in the process of lickety-split cleaning. A maid is slowly pushing a broom which, in turn, is shoving a small mound of collected dust across the bare floor.

A jet-black cat is curled up in a ridiculously amusing chair that is, simply, a giant pair of red lips stuffed with down. The lips are seductively rounded and vaguely reminiscent of an Andy Warhol impression o Marilyn Monroe's mouth. What's droll is that the unsuspecting cat looks as if it is about to be swallowed.

At last the owner of it all opes into the room. It's Tony Perkins! Tony is in faded jeans and an often-washed, too-small sweatshirt that displays a wide expanse of the stomach's bare skin. Now 41 — and, with the perpetually distressed expression — Tony appears to be in need of tea and sympathy.

The tall, lanky man, a perpetual juvenile with gangly ways, perches on the couch yoga style while simultaneously planting dirty, worn, unpolished old shoes on the pillow between him and the interviewer.

The move is symbolic. The dirty footwear is a mini fortress that says don't come too close and, perhpas more poignant, accept me as I am . . or lump it.

Tony's attitude about clothes obviously borders on the hippie:

"I wear the same thing for weeks at a time," he says. "Fashion is a very outside product. Acting comes from the inside." The dialogue is see-saw and contradictory. Once Tony has made his point, he smiles slyly and announces that: "When I get dressed, everything is by Yves Saint Laurent."

He's far more interested in the occult.

Mystical Tony sees dreams as messages moving into semi-reality from the unconscious mind. He must decipher them, translate them. A pad and pencil is kept near his bed Immediately upon awakening he jots down remembered impressions in detail. What's the point? "I don't want to forget anything. Dreams are always discussed in analysis."

When Tony is asked to relate a specific dream and specify how he and his analyst translated it, the brushoff is both polite and final. "That would be a boring and prententious thing to do. Anyway, I don't horde my dreams." There's a moment of cool silence.

Despite the protest, that doesn't mean he hasn't tried.

Once, in relating a nightmare to his doctor, he recorded the highly personal dialogue on a tape. Later he played it back in the solitariness of his room. It amounted to dire disappointment. Tony deciphered the playback as a kind of escape hatch.

"The drama was diluted. And I found it was a way of not hearing what the doctor said the first time around," he says. Tony has always been painfully self-critical and highly disciplined. These traits, plus profound sensitivity, have made his moods plummet and skyrocket. He has been in analysis four years in order to be completely in control.

Tony never married.

Once he was engaged to a rich girl but the liaison was terribly temporary. "She was much too rich," he says. After the highly charged breakup scene, he shied away from commitment. Now his frame of reference has switched to romantic receptivity.

"I never realized how much I'd like to get married," he says.

What has propelled him to think differently? "Lately I've met nice girls who don't threaten me, make demands or try to push me around. I see the possibility of marriage in a new light."

Women who fascinate and mesmerize him are those who can communicate one-to-one. "That," he says, "is the ideal trait. It has nothing to do with beauty pageants or designer clothes."

Tony's townhouse isn't a lonely place.

Friends — male and female — take temporary or semi-permanent shelter there. Always there is a welcome and glow. The host never pries. Friends know that he expects that attitude to be reciprocal.

About his environment:

"No doors are closed. There are no locked-off places. There is a kind of openness about this place. And yet — yet — there is a marvelous aura of privacy." Of course, the environment is an offshoot of the man.

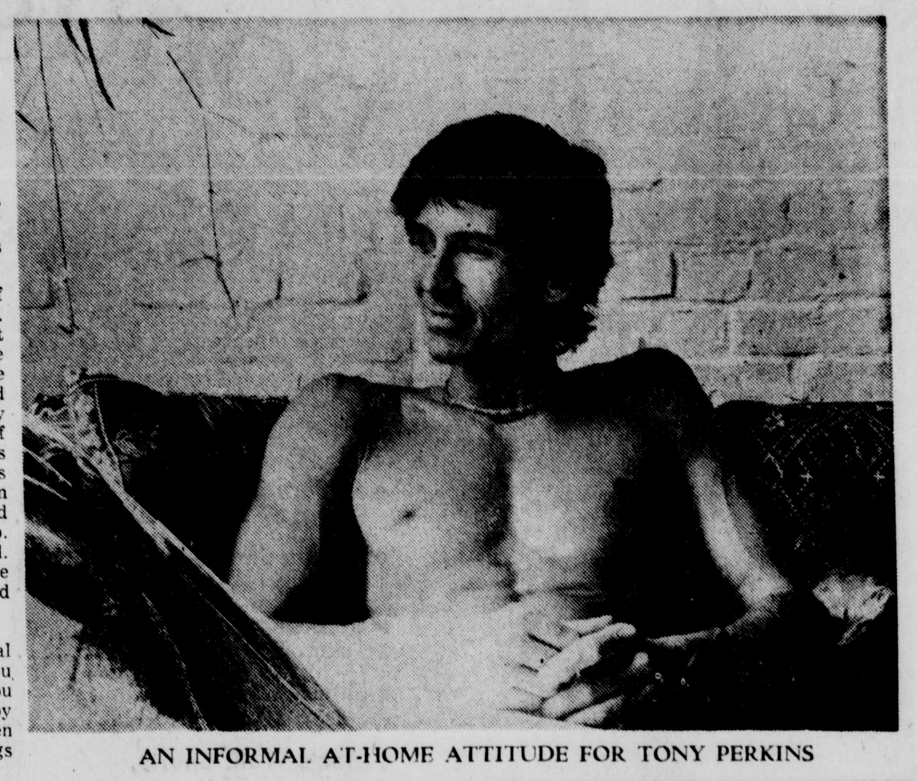
Tony, who's a product of status-ridden Brookline, Mass. — a Boston suburb — went to Brown & Nichols, the private school where the children of socialites and celebrities like Henry Kissinger learn the basics of life. Mostly to please his mama, he went to Rollins College in Florida and then to Columbia. But the world of make-believe was his No. 1 love. He never graduated. A year before diploma time he hitchhiked to Hollywood and eventual fame.

He says:

"Acting is not a trival game. As you get older you put more worth into it. You pump truth into the role by narrowing the gulf between fantasy and the real things that you feel in your gut."

Tony has watched himself on television when old movies are rerun. He doesn't strike himself as having been spectacular: "I seem so frightened — so hidden!" he exclaims.

It is that whole business of self-understanding and self-discovery that has propelled him into analysis. Tony wants to be educated on the subject of Tony — even though it means having his actions, reactions, motivations and feelings examined microscopically.



AN INFORMAL AT-HOME ATTITUDE FOR TONY PERKINS

On the agony and ecstasy of it all:

"Sometimes I cry when things become crystal clear. Yes, I really cry! But there are things that are absolutely joyful about it. You see, with understanding you not only survive the business of living — you are able to cope. The information becomes part of the architecture of your life — rather than just general knowledge."

Doing the Right Thing

By ELIZABETH L. POST

Dear Mrs. Post:

The last few years we have not liked accepting invitations to the homes of some of our acquaintances and have not been interested in inviting them to our home because they have become TV sports nuts. Whether they are in their own home or in ours, they INSIST on watching every event, regardless of the fact that we do not.

These things irritate both my husband and myself. I feel that if we are invited, they could at least ask what we would like to see. Ordinarily when we have company we turn the set off so we can visit, and we would rather our friends did the same, especially since we make a hundred mile trip to visit.

Am I looking at this incorrectly?

SUE

Dear Sue:

No, you are not! TV is a marvelous thing, but it sometimes seems as if it were going to destroy sociability and our ability to converse entirely. TV should never be allowed to take the place of friends, and of communication between people. Sitting dumbly and staring at the tube, even though next to someone, is scarcely stimulating an exchange of ideas and opinions.

When you ask your friends over, say "come over for a little chat" (or cards or whatever you wish), but make it clear you have other plans than turning on the TV. When you are invited to their homes, be frank. Tell them you would love to see them, but you honestly don't care about watching the game. If they say, "Oh, we had thought of watching it," just reply "Okay, let's make it another time, then."

Dear Mrs. Post:

My daughter is to be a flower girl in the wedding of one of my friends. The wedding party is quite large in number. My question is this: Should the flower girl be expected to pay as much, or for that matter anything, toward the shower the attendants are giving for the bride?

"CURIOUS"

The flower girl should not be expected to pay a full share of the shower. She should, of course, take a gift if she attends, and you might offer to contribute toward it — perhaps by making some of the refreshments. But your daughter's role is purely "decorative" and she is too young to take on the responsibilities of the bridesmaids.

* * *

Dear Mrs. Post:

My son is marrying a lovely girl — soon. They will have a church wedding, and brunch at twelve o'clock — with champagne.

Would a dinner-dance at my country club following the rehearsal the night before look ostentatious? There would be about fifty people. However, I don't want to outshine the wedding. I wanted to have the out-of-town immediate family and those who entertained for the bride.

Mrs. G.

Dear Mrs. G.

It would not be "too much" if you keep it down to just the people you mention. It will seem that you are trying to outdo the wedding reception if you start to include other friends and neighbors.

Be sure that the bridal couple isn't having such a good time dancing that they forget to go home and get some rest before the wedding.

* * *

Dear Mrs. Post:

I came to this city from a rather structured society — my husband was in the service.

I don't know how to handle people who don't RSVP to invitations, and when, in despair, you call them, they say they don't know what their plans are as yet, or ask you about the possiblity of changing the time or date of your party!

I know my new home is in a rsort area, but surely a relaxed society is also one where an invitation is either accepted or declined within a short period of time.

I would appreciate your opinion.

Mrs. D. Lawrence

Dear Mrs. Lawrence:

People who are unsure about their plans should refuse an invitation rather than keep the hostess "hanging." They may explain the reason if they wish, which gives the hostess the prerogative of saying "You can let me know later."

It is both lazy and rude not to anwer an invitation promptly — in whatever type of community you may live. A resort area should be no different from any other. So please, readers, don't give your city a bad name by failing to do this simplest of courtesies — RSVP promptly.

The Consumer Question Box

By MARGARET DANA

Q: How is it best to go about selling one's ideas and inventions for home products and useful equipment many home-makers need? I often have ideas for products I know women want. Other women too, I'm sure, have useful ideas that could be marketed. What source for information can you suggest?

A: The U.S. Department of Commerce has a speical division whose job is to help inventors bring their inventions to the attention of potential manufacturers. This department does not buy or sell invenions but does provide much information and help for the amateur.

Most states also have economic development departments which cooperate in sponsoring invention expositions. For further information on what help is available, write to: Office of Invention and Innovation, National Bureau of Standards, U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Washington, D.C. 20234.

Q: I am writing you regarding the enclosed tags which were on a pant suit I bought at a well-known chain store. The two tags carry three sets of washing and drying instructions which conflict with each other. I think manufacturers should be alerted to such contradictory instructions. I enjoy your informative column and never miss reading it. Can you help with this labeling problem?

A: Actually these labels are in agreement, since they are intended to give consumers alternate methods of washing. The label carrying the fabric maker's name offers both machine-wahing and hand-washing instructions, to give you a choice.

Since this is a durable-press fabric, the machine-washing directions say to tumble dry (in an automatic dryer) using the "wash-and-wear" drying cycle. This is important, since durable press cannot reutrn to its unwrinkled state without the use of a tumble dryer, unless it is washed by hand and allowed to drip-dry without wringing.

The third set of instructions on the garment-maker's label, says "Machine Wash Line Dry." This is an older type label which recognizes that no all consumers have automatic dryers. So it combines machine-washing with the line-drying of the hand-washing method.

Q: I would like to know where I can obtain a detailed listing of food low in purine. The doctor has given me a diet sheet but it just lists the major foods in that cateory.

A: You might try writing Public Inquiries Branch, Public Health Service, U.S. Department of Health, Education and Wlefare, Washington, D. C. 20201. Also, you could try the department of Community Health and Health Education, American Medical Association,. 535 N. Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois,60610.

Q: I am greatly concerned about the chemical additives used in fattening beef. I am particularly worried about the use of DES, which I understand has now been partly banned. Since this chemical collects in the animal liver, and it is cancer-producing, I wonder if eating liver would make this a danger to all of us.

A: The Food and Drug Administration has banned the use of DES in cattle feed, but permits its use when implanted under the skin. This way the chemical does not go through the digestive system, including the liver. However, there is still much discussion as to whether DES should be used at all. No actual examples of harmhave been found in human research, but many people believe it should be dropped entirely. The industry says this would mean less weight and more growing time needed to bring cattle to sale.

Q: some time ago I read of a research study that had been done on stainless steel cookware. The findings were that cooking in stainless steel at high heat was harmful. I am very concerned but can find nothing more to confirm or deny this report. I will appreciate some word on this report.

A: Cooking utensils and their materials have been thoroughly investigated by the Food and Drug Administration, American Medical Association, and various university research groups. Stainless steel has never had any bad marks for safety. The conclusion drawn from all these reports is simply that any cooking utensil is satisfactory whether made of aluminum, enamel, glass, stainless steel or other materials ordinarily used.

Q: Why is the Food and Drug Administration trying to limit the amounts of vitamin supplements (A and D) to less than the amounts in a helping of spinach? Isn't this terrible? First they process your food until there are no nutrients left, then they limit what you can buy to help make up the deficit. How do you explain this limitation of good necessary vitamins?

A: The explanation is that nutrition experts and health scientists have found that overdoses of some vitamins — A, D and E for example — can create serious health hazards. Just because a limited amount per day or month is correct for health needs does not mean an unlimited amount is safe.

What has been happening is that too many food products added vitamins in larger amounts than needed per day, not allowing for the other foods consumers would eat which would duplicate those amounts. This is why the FDA must carefully regulate the additions of extra vitamins.

(Margaret Dana welcomes opinions and questions on buying and will use them in her column as rapidly as research and space permit. Personal answers are impossible due to large volume of mail from readers. Address: Margaret Dana Research Center, R. R. 1 Chalfont, Pa. 18914.)

ABOUT ANTIQUES

SILVER DEPOSIT GLASSWARE

Silver deposit is the name given to the art of depositing silver in decorative patterns upon the surface of glassware or other materials.

The method used required items with previously treated and prepared patterns be immersed in a solution along with a piece of silver. With the application of an electric current, the silver decomposed and was deposited only upon the pattern. The process was, in essence, a partial silver-plating. This type of decoration was popular during the latter years of the nineteenth century and the early years of this presnt century.

Silver Deposit Glassware is usually found decorated with fruit or flower designs. Roses, chrysanthemums, tulips, and iris are most often seen. Silver grapes in relief grace many decanters. For those wishing to own a piece of this glassware, there should be a wide selection to choos from. Candlesticks, perfume bottles, cruets, hatpins and toothpick holders are bu. a token sampling. Some of the most desirable are the elegant colored-glass art nouveau pieces with their lavish decoration.

Most of the pieces of Silver Deposit Glassware found on today's antique market will be of American origin. Such outstanding firms as Reed & Barton and the New York Silver Deposit Co. are but two of many manufacturers responsible for these lovely pieces.

The use of silver deposit for decoration was not confined exclusively to glassware. Some chinaware tea and coffee sets created by Lenox, Inc. (well known for American Belleek) were so decorated. Bibles, purses, picture frames, buttons, and card cases are a few of the items made in other than glass and decorated in this manner.

Prices on Silver Deposit Glassware are usually moderate. But with popularity rising, be prepared to dig a little deeper as the law of supply and demand tightens its grip.

Salad Mold Italiano Just Naturally Good

SALADS ARE TOPS on diet menus. Vegetable Salad Mold Italiano is not only low in calories but refreshingly high in flavor. Unflavored gelatine and low calorie Italian dressing blend naturally with cucumber, tomatoes, green pepper and cauliflowerets for an entree or side dish salad.

An early Roman citizen was inspired one day to sprinkle salt on some lettuce to make it tastier. Thus the dish we call salad, from the Latin "sal" for salt, was born.

Although salads didn't really become popular in the U.S. until after World War I, they are a familiar and very important item on our menus today. Countless books have been written on the seemingly limitless subject of salad making in all its delicious variety.

And with ubiquitous Knox Unflavored Gelatine, a great variety is easily achieved. It allows you to enjoy the full, fresh natural flavors of almost all foods: meat, fish, eggs, cheese, vegetables, fruit. Unflavored gelatin is low in calories, too—only 28 per envelope—so gelled main dishes, salads and deserts fit readily into diet menu planning.

This recipe for Vegetable Salad Mold Italiano combines a spicy low calorie Italian dressing and crunchy cauliflowerets, green pepper, cucumber and cherry tomatoes with unflavored gelatin for a refreshing low calorie entree or side dish. Enjoy to your heart's content: there are approximately 45 calories per ¾ cup serving.

Gel dishes are simple to unmold when you know how. Dip the mold in warm (not hot) water to the depth of its contents. Loosen around the edge with the tip of a paring knife. Place a serving dish tightly on top of the mold and turn it upside down. Shake, holding the serving dish to the mold. If gelatin does not readily slip out, repeat the procedure.

Vegetable Salad Mold Italiano

One small cucumber, diced
12 cherry tomatoes, halved
One cup diced green peper
One cup small cauliflowerets
One-half cup bottled low calorie Italian dressing
Two envelopes unflavored gelatin
Two cups cold water

In large bowl, toss vegetables with low calorie Italian dressing; marinate in refrigerator overnight.

In medium saucepan, sprinkle unflavored gelatin over one-half cup water; let stand until gelatin is moistened. Place over low heat; stir constantly until gelatin dissolves, about 5 minutes. Remove from heat, stir in remaining one and one-half cup water.

Stir gelatin into vegetable mixture; turn into 6-cup mold and chill until firm. Makes 8 servings. Approximately 45 calories per three-quarter cup serving.

Helpful Hints From Heloise

DON'T LET THIS LEAK OUT!

Dear Folks:

I'm told there's nothing so frustrating as chasing a sheet on a water bed!

There are no water beds in our home so I personally can't vouch or unvouch for them, but it looks like the country is in love with them — except when it comes to keeping the sheet in place at night.

A friend of mine has one. She finally went out and bought a not too heavy foam mattress and some thin contour sheets (made especially for foam mattresses). She says it works beautifully!

Whatever size sheet you buy must fit the foam mattress that you purchase, though. This is for sure.

Dear Heloise:

It won't be long now until one of my favorite of spring vegetables will be on the market again. Can you guess? What else but asparagus?

A hint that you shared about cooking the stalks in a coffee pot prompts me to send this one of mine. After watching various friends cut their asparagus with a knife, this must be something many gals don't know about.

Ever sink your teeth into a bite of asparagus, only to find it is "woody" as all get out? To avoid this, the best way is to break the stalks by grasping the ends of the stalk with both hands.

Gently bend the stalk until it breaks. The tip end is the good part so discard the root end. This must be done one stalk at a time as they do not all break in the same place.

Sometimes it seems such a waste to discard so much of the root end that I have cut a piece off right next to the break. I always end up being sorry I did, because that is where the woody part starts. This is one time that it does not pay to be saving, as no one will eat those woody bites that you try to rescue.

Here is a helpful hint to the gals who enjoy the fresh baked bread from those popular frozen loaves.

Dear Heloise:

Here's my temper-saver.

No time to defrost that package of bacon you bought on sale and put in your freezer? Those slices seem welded together?

Just pick up the whole frozen pound and start rolling it up as you would a magazine. (It will roll because the fat keeps it a little flexible.) Do it twice.

Now you can peel off those slices, easy as pie!

Go Chinese . . . And Eat for Less Than $20 Per Month

By JOHN SHUTTLEWORTH

Despite (or, in some cases, BECAUSE OF) government action and consumer boycotts, food prices in the United States and Canada are likely to remain uncomfortably high for some time to come. Uncomfortably high, that is, for most of us . . . but not for some exceedingly clever folks like Richard Beardsley.

About three years ago, you see, Dick Beardsley was a college student in Des Moines, Iowa. And, like most college students, he never seemed to have a great deal of money to squander on girls. Or cars. Or clothes. Or even food.

Especially food. Once, when Dick added up his expenditures for edibles, he was appalled to discover that he was spening an average of $40 to $50 a month for a typically college student bill of fare: an occasional good meal supplemented by a lot of hamburgers, French fries, soft drinks and a hit-or-miss selection of empty calorie snack foods.

Being of sounder mind and stronger will than most of us, Beardsley immediately decided to rectify that sorry situation . . . and was soon enjoying a tastier and far more nutritious diet for as little as (you aren't going to believe it!) $10 a month. His secret? Richard Beardsley completely and utterly switched his eating habits from midwest American . . . to Chinese.

"There are four big reasons why I've become a Chinese food (CF) enthusiast," says Dick. "One, it's inexpensive. Two, it's nutritious and an ideal diet for people who have trouble with their weight (I trimmed off 20 pounds in two months and have never felt better). Three a great deal of the emphasis in Chinese cooking is upon flavor, texture and eye appeal which — in my opinion — makes CF extremely satisfying. And, four, preparing Chinese food is both interesting and a lot of fun."

THE MOTHER EARTH NEWS
...it tells you how

Beardsley claims he knew absolutely nothing about Chinese cooking before he made his big switch and that almost anyone should be able to duplicate the success he now enjoys. In Dick's words, "It's easy. I first went to the library, checked out every CF cookbook on the shelf and copied the recipes I thought sounded interesting. Next, I started a collection of soy sauce, rice, water chestnuts, bamboo shoots and all the other unusual ingredients I did not already have. I then purchased some chicken, pork and beef, began experimenting and soon had my CF system pretty well worked out."

At the beginning of each month Dick now buys two chickens, one large beef steak and one pork roast. He then divides the meat into individual portions (about four to five ounces each) that he freezes and uses as desired. This pre-packaging gives Beardsley positive control over the (generally) most expensive ingredient of any dish and is one of the primary reasons that he's able to keep his food costs so low.

"Vegetables provide the bulk of most Chinese dishes," Dick says, "and I keep plenty of them on hand. I buy what I can — celery, tomatoes, green peppers, spinach, broccoli, cauliflower, asparagus, green beans — fresh in season and purchase many of the same items canned during the rest of the year. Whenever possible, I try to visit the markets just once a month because I've found that I tend to buy too much and too senselessly when I shop in spurts.

According to Beardsley, you can dabble with CF preparation in ordinary North American pots and pans, but to really do the job right, you'll need one of the traditional round-bottomed Chinese cooking utensils called a wok.

"You can pay as much as $30 for a wok," Dick says, "but I bought mine in a big city department store for just $2. The only other special equipment I needed that I didn't already have was a cleaver and a cutting board. I don't remember what the first cost, but I do know that I made the second from a 2 x 12 x 15-inch piece of scrap pine that I got from the lumber yard for a quarter."

All in all, Beardsley calculates that he launched himself into Chinese cooking on an initial food and equipment investment of about $25 (an amount which he more than saved the very first month he enjoyed his new diet). And — less than two years ago — when he contacted MOTHER, Dick's inital year of solid Chinese recipes had cost him only a little over $10 a month. Even if we double or triple that figure to allow for today's inflation, Beardsley must still be eating for less than half the money most of us currently spend on food.

But, has he had to sacrifice health or taste or variety to save those dollars? Dick doesn't seem to think so. He says, "I certainly feel that I've been eating very well since I switched to a Chinese menu. I've had no illness and I've only felt better . . . in part because I no longer have the desire to constantly stuff myself with greasy, starchy trash foods.

"And talk about taste! The Chinese are masters when it comes to accenting flavors of all kinds. There's no way to adequately describe the delicate and unique toothsomeness of Honey Chicken or the mixture of contrasting goodness in Sweet and Sour Pork . . . but, as you know if you've savored them, both dishes are delightful and impossible to forget.

"As for variety, well, my favorite Chinese cookbook contains 1,000 recipes . . . so many that I've had trouble working my way back to the ones I've already tried and liked!"

Perhaps we could all learn something about tasty, varied, nutritious and LOW-COST meals from Richard Beardsley and his Chinese mentors.

For some of Richard Beardsley's favorite Chinese recipes and instructions in the proper use of a wok, send 10 cents and a stamped, self-addressed long envelope to THE MOTHER EARTH NEWS in care of The Daily Feeman. Ask for Reprint No. 124, CHINESE FOOD.

Counting Calories Is NOT the True Key to Weight Loss

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

(Second in a Series of Six)

It is possible to eat as much as any reasonable person would wish to eat and still not get fat or increase the fat particles in your blood. It is more important to consider what you eat and how much you eat. To illustrate the point, there are nearly eight times as many calories in a pound of raw cured bacon as there are in a pound of uncreamed cottage cheese.

All those calories in bacon and pork fat do not mean these foods contain more nutrients. In fact, there are more healthy nutrients and more than twice the protein in the chicken. Many of the calories in fatty foods "don't count" — meaning that they don't count in terms of essential vitamins, minerals, and nutrients. They do count in causing obesity, fat-particle deposits in the arteries, and other health problems. Separable animal fat is almost devoid of everything except calories.

If you want to know how many calories you are really eating there is no substitute for knowing the caloric content of the different foods you eat. For the most part, lean meat, fish, vegetables, and fruit permit a person to eat a fairly large quantity of food without eating too many calories — Unless they are soaked in fat, butter, or sauces made with fat.

Sugar is a problem in controlling the number of calories because it, too contains little water. It also contains very little except calories for the body's nutritional needs. There is less than 1 per cent water in sugar, and a quarter of a pound contains nearly 400 calories — about four times as many calories as a comparable amount of light meat of fryer chicken without the skin.

It seems as if everyone talks about calories — but just what is a calorie? It is a way of measuring energy by the actual heat it produces. The metabolism of food generates energy in the form of heat, and this heat energy is the fuel for the body. This is why physical work makes a person hot, and why, after death, when food metabolsim stops, the body begins to cool.

Calories can be obtained from carbohydrates, proteins, fats, and even alcohol. The caloric content of the food has little or nothing to do with its content of essential vitamins, minerals, or other nutrients. It is just an expression of available heat energy. A proper diet cannot be defined in terms of calories alone, since the body needs iron, calcium, other minerals and a host of vitamins.

Measuring the calorie content is useful in evaluating food energy intake and expenditure. The active person needs energy, and this means food. The physical inactive person needs less energy, and he should eat less food. If more food energy is eaten then expended on a daily basis, the excess food is stored as fat deposits. Here, then, is the only way to determine if you are getting too many calories, regardless of how little or how much you eat; if you are gaining fat deposits, you are storing excess calories and eating too many calories for your level of activity. This doesn't always mean you are eating too much food. It can mean that you are eating the wrong kind of food, such as fat containing a large number of calories in a very small portion. Of it can mean that your level of physical activity is too low.

It is important to appreciate that even though the body weight is a useful guide in detecting overeating, the only good test is to feel for the accumulation of fat around the waist, hips, and other locations. This is the real indication of excess food storage. A tall person may not appear to weigh too much for his height according to the scales, but if there is an accumulation of fat, or the familiar spare tire, he is too fat regardless of what the scales read.

Because of our ritualistic fixation on the pounds registered by the scales, we often do not realize that our goal in dieting should be to eliminate excess fat storage, not to reduce the number of pounds It is important to understand this concept.

A growing child, especially during rapid growth periods, can consume lots of calories without getting fat. In addition to providing energy for physical activity, the calories are used in building new muscles, bones, organs, and even increasing the amount of blood in the body. Even so, the level of physical activity is still important. Growing muscles and strong bones need to be used, and this means physical activity. The child in front of the television set needs fewer calories than the active child.

Gothenburg Hub

NEW YORK

In summer a young Swede's fancy turns to thoughts of Gothenburg, hub of the country's lively West Coast resort area which stretches 250 miles along the salt water Kattegat and Skagerrack, arms of the North Sea.

This holiday center with its broad tree-lined boulevards, streetside cafes, late-hour discotheques and fun-filled Liseberg amusement park, also offers an array of fine hotels and restaurants since it has become one of Scandinavia's best equipped convention cities in recent years.

For the independent traveler, a two or three day visit in Gothenburg before setting out on a coastal drive, a three-day Gota Canal cruise to Stockholm or a northern fjords tour, is a smorgasbord of attractions.

The Old City was designed by 17th century Dutchmen who could not resist the temptation to construct canals, and so a boat trip through the still surviving waterways and into the harbor is a sightseeing treat.

Take time also to visit the large English-style botanical garden which lies in the heart of Gothenburg. Stroll along the main thoroughfare, the "Avenyn", to the Gotaplatsen, the cultural heart of the city where you will find Carl Milles' famed fountain sculpture "Poseidon", the Museum of Art and Concert Hall. Browse in the city's traffic-free shopping quarters where the pedestrian reigns supreme.

And, just for fun, rise early one morning to take in the daily fish auction at Gothenburg's harbor, the largest fishing port in Scandinavia. The auction, which you will find amusing, begins at 7:00 a.m.

From June 19 to August 14 a special Gothenburg package, including accomodations at a number of hotels, breakfast and lunch or dinner at selected restaurants, is available for $12 to $15 a day per person.

Check with your local travel agent for details on this vacation spree in Sweden.

Mystic Whaler in Chesapeake Bay First

ANNAPOLIS, MD

For the first time in the history of Chesapeake Bay a passenger ship under sail will take landlubbers down to the sea along the scenic and historic shores of middle Chesapeake Bay on a May-June Spring schedule.

Sailing from Annapolis, Md., the windjammer Mystic Whaler, celebrated 44 passenger two-masted vacation schooner, replica of a 19th century whaling vessel will set a May 4 schedule through the end of June. She will return again around Labor Day and cruise through the first of November. During July and August, she cruises out of Mystic Conn., in New England waters.

Mystic Whaler now becomes for the record a Chesapeake Bay schooner, with two-thirds of her schedule in these waters, and only July and August out of her home port of Mystic, Conn.

Mystic Whaler, U.S. Coast Guard-approved U.S. flag schooner, is the only windjammer presently operating on the Chesapeake. In her last four Fall seasons, she has carried nearly 3000 passengers out of Annapolis. She boards passengers at the Annapolis Hilton Inn Sunday, Wednesday and Friday nights after 8:30 p.m. and sails two mid-week and one week-end cruise weekly, all 2-day cruises. Wednesdays the schooner is in port, and can be seen dockside. Cozy, comfortable private cabins, a pullman-style Great Room (economy quarters) and family four-berth bunkrooms, running hot and cold water in all cabins, tiled showers and bath in all compartments are basic feature comforts aboard. An all-electric galley provides hearty, wholesome meals, some served on deck under way, including the famous Whaleburger lunch char-broiled on the ship's try-works where whale oil was once boiled from blubber. Scurrying under full sail before Bay breezes, Mystic Whaler dispells the cares and worries of our everyday world, and puts her passengers in touch with the nostalgia of the sailing past. One would do well to book aboard this famous schooner for a rare and exhilarating experience on a 2-day voyage to harbours along the Eastern Shore, including Oxford, St. Michael's, Cambridge, Rock Hall and others.

Much can be found in the way of pleasure and privacy just a few miles from the dozen or so metropolitan areas so near this unique ship.

The crew is young, the ship is new (launched 1967), the sun is strong, the air is crisp. After you've been aboard this husky whaleship which measures 100', 100 tons, you'll talk about it for a lifetime. Singles, couples, old and young, doctors, secretaries, executives — all find a common bond — shipmates! And when the schooner wends her way into port for the night, skins tingle, appetites are whetted, everyone is eager to recall with delight the day's sail — in the twilight of a lovely Maryland harbour.

Prices range from $75. to $98 per person, depending on accommodations, and include all meals, snacks, and all the comforts! Instant reservations available by writing for a free folder: Mystic Whaler, Mystic, Conn., 06355. Really, who'll miss you for just two li'l ol' days!

KINGSTON

Thomas S. Ingarra Jr., son of Mrs. Lucille M. Ingarra and the late Dr. Thomas S. Ingarra of Kingston, has been recommended for a medical scholarship, pending formal approval of the Ulster County Legislature and a letter of acceptance from Albany Medical School.

Announcement of Ingarra's selection by the Ulster County Medical Scholarship Board was made recently by County Legislator Louis Bevier (R-Dist. 8).

The 21-year-old Ingarra, who resides at 145 Wall Street, graduated from Kingston High School and is presently attending Fordham College.

The selection of Ingarra was made at a recent meeting of the Scholarship Board which considered four applicants. Action on a second designation was delayed until further information is obtained, Bevier said.

After discussion, the board decided that considering the financial need of the candidates and the fact that it would be to the county's advantage to invest a considerable amount of money in them thereby insuring their return to the community to practice medicine in Ulster County, it agreed to designate the sum of $3,000 each to two candidates.

The Getaway of Ali

By LEI

"Ali" is rapidly becoming one of those names like Zsa Zsa or Elvis or Marlon that needs no last name to identify it. However, one gets a feeling that Ali McGraw is going to definitely go on using her last name. So far, Ali seems to be a star who is stubbornly refusing to do any one of the things that make a person a star.

After two movies that cast her as a fresh-faced teenager (with a pretty fresh vocabulary, too) Ali turned around and made a movie that cast her as a woman her own age—which happens to be an honestly admitted 34-years-old. Not only that, but the woman is a bank robber on the run from police. And Ali was slightly irritated that she didn't look old enough to play the part. In Hollywood, most actresses would be irritated if they DID look their age. But then, Ali's looks have always manifested her superb individuality.

She wears her hair in styles that are not recommended for broad-faced girls. She lets her eyebrows grow into a jungle, while most girls are busy tweezing theirs out. She circles her eyes with eveliner in a manner that is definitely a no-no for a woman with small eyes, and she wears the pale lipstick most girls with full lips would avoid—particularly if they had a crooked front tooth. The result is that Ali McGraw does not look like every other beautiful woman—she looks completely like herself, the one and only original Ali. It is a beauty trick that only the most self-assured can carry out. But Ali is very self-assured.

Her latest movie "Getaway" which will soon be showing in the Kingston area at one of the Walter Reade Theaters was a heavy manifestation of her self-assurance. In many ways, the film was a getaway for Ali. In the first place, obviously, it was a getaway from her roles as a girl nearly half her age. It is her first role also casting her as less of a heroine type. And making the movie vastly influenced Ali's off-screen life.

Ali had always picked and chosen her scripts very carefully. "Goodbye Columbus" was practically an accident—she got the part because someone saw an advertisement for which she had modeled. She chose the "Love Story" script herself because it "made her cry and she didn't know why." It also had the same effect on hundreds of thousands of other people. By the time "Love Story" was released, Ali had everything that a movie star could dream of—she was signed up to the influential Paramount Studio. And she was married to Bob Evans, some of the shiniest top brass in that studio. She was about to fulfill a lifetime dream of playing a role in "The Great Gatsby," a story by one of her heros, F. Scott Fitzgerald, for Paramount. However, the whole situation might have been the dream of a lifetime to the average actress—but it was doing nothing to satisfy the spirit of the individualistic Ali McGraw. She had things she wanted to accomplish in her 33rd year, and she was not accomplishing them. So she made her getaway.

First, she got away from Bob Evans. That made things uncomfortable at Paramount, so she got away from Paramount, and, in the process, probably, from "The Great Gatsby." She got away to a home of her own with the son that she loves, her toddler, Joshua. Then she got away to "Getaway."

During her Hollywood years, she had stubbornly refused to learn to drive. Much of the action in "Getaway" required Ali at the wheel, so she got her license in record time. Within a few weeks, she was screeching down dusty Texas trails at 90-miles-an-hour. Normally a gentle person who revered life, Ali managed to find new insights into her nature as she raised a gun and fired it at a fellow actor that the movie required her to kill. For awhile, her co-star Steve McQueen became the co-star in her private life, too, and it was supposed they might get married. However, most star-gazers think that Steve is now part of Ali's past. She has plenty of temperament, but it is not the tantrum-throwing sort that Steve McQueen has been reported to have. That had no part in her life.

Shortly after she made "Getaway" Ali stated that she didn't care if she ever made another picture—except "Gatsby", of course, and studio egos being what they are, she probably won't get a chance to do that. Unlike most actresses, she holds herself to no schedule of three films a year, or even one film a year. The schedule that controls her life is the schedule of being what she wants to be—and finding out just exactly what that is.

That's an unusual attitude for a star, but then, being unusual is what made Ali McGraw a star. It was what gave her entrance to Hollywood. And it may give her her getaway.

Rondout Scholars

RONALD SAUL (L), JAMES WARNOT, DAVID SCHREYER

KYSERIKE

Among the many honors being accorded Rondout Valley High School seniors this year are two National Merit Scholarships and a National Merit Semifinalist award.

He plans a music major and in high school is a member of band, and All-State Band as well as the New Paltz College Community Orchestra and the Rondout Valley Choral Society. He received a commendation from the Mathematical Association of America.

'Okay, I'll Do It Myself'

How to Tell One Wall From the Other

By BARBARA A. CURRY

(From "Okay, I'll Do It Myself!" by Barbara A. Curry. Copyright (c) 1971 by Barbara A. Curry. Reprinted by permission of Random House, Inc.)

Walls, Types of. This may sound dull, but it can make "going to the wall" a much simpler, less frustrating experience if you know what you're facing. In some cases, knowing what you're up against may keep you from getting into the experience in the first place. There can be awful problems!

Hollow construction is usually found in inside walls and once in a while in outside walls of newer buildings. In older buildings, chances are that all walls will be plaster and hollow. As ominous as "hollow" may sound, all it means is that there is space behind the wall surface you see.

Another hollow-wall construction is called drywall, which is either plasterboard or gypsum or Sheetrock. Drywall comes in panels and is nailed directly to the studs. With the demise of plastering as an art, this form of construction is being increasingly used because it's fast, economical, straight and smooth. Unfortunately, it's about as soundproof as a tuning fork.

Solid walls are the words which pretty much tell the story. Usually this refers to a wall built of cinder block, brick, concrete or stone. It can be covered with plaster to give a smooth-wall appearance. You're liable to run into this on outside walls and in between apartment walls.

Count your blessings if the hollow wall is your lot. Even cinder block is worth a small cheer. The trick with brick is to drill into and insert the fastener in the mortar in between the brick. It's stronger than brick, anyway. Concrete and stone — sob! sob! — almost always require professional help.

Lumber is wood cut to various lengths, widths and thicknesses, graded by quality. For most of your projects, you'll probably be dealing with pine. It's inexpensive, easy to work with, and takes stain or paint very well. However, buy a good grade of pine to avoid gummy knots, flaws and excessive warping. The really goofy thing about lumber is the so-called size of it. A 2" x 4" (that's a depth and width, not length) is no more a 2" x 4" than I'm a 10-foot pin tree. It's been 1⅝" x 3⅝" for some time. The same discrepant sizes apply to other dimensions, too. Unless you're building or putting in some masterpiece that has to fit exactly it's not a problem. Otherwise, beware and compensate accordingly.

Plywood is wood processed in thin layers placed at right angle by grain to create a strong, warp-resistant material. Again 1" thick isn't 1" here either — it's ¾". Plywood comes in panels so that you can get an "unbroken" surface much wider than that possible with regular lumber. Most lumber yards will cut plywood to size you want.

Hardboard is finely ground wood fibers mightily compressed under heat. To make it easy for you to spot, it's smooth (sometimes on one side only) and hard, and what pegboard is made from. Its uniformly spaced holes and special hooks allow you to hang anything that will hang, like pots, pans, utensils, shelves, tools, memos, pictures and whatnot. Pegboard is invaluable for wall storage in cramped quarters with little cupboard and drawer space around.

Paneling, Wood. If you're suddenly seized by a mad desire for the rustic warmth of a wood wall, you can be soothed. An amazing assortment of real wood grains are now available in panels or sheets. Measure the width and length of area to be wooded and choose your medicine. You can literally paste many of these to any relatively even wall with a special cement. Another way is use furring strips (rough lumber about 1" x 2" thick), which you put up at approximately 18" intervals with plaster nails. These strips support the paneling. Then you nail, with finishing nails, the paneling to the strips. The latter is a bit drastic for renters, but again, you can remove and repair the wall to avoid the wrath of the landlord.

Springtime Repairs

By MR. FIX

Masonry repairs are generally done in the spring. This is a fact that has little to do with the weather. It just happens that people make repairs mostly in the spring because they neglected to do so in the fall.

And the hairline cracks you thought were not worth bothering with last fall are now a good deal larger. During the cold winter, rain filled the cracks, froze and enlarged them. Snow and the ice did the same thing. Then thawing caused alternate contraction and expansion.

And if you don't do something about this soon the spring rains will cause even more damage.

First chance you get, inspect sidewalk, foundation and driveway carefully. Examine especially well the joints where sections of masonry meet. A patio, walk or drive that meets the house foundation has a joint that is a likely spot for damage.

Small gaps can be sealed with calking compound or asphalt cement. Larger openings should be filled with concrete patch.

Cracks in concrete also should be filled with concrete patch. First roughen the edges of the crack with a chisel. Enlarge the opening so that it is wider at the bottom than at the top. Use a wire brush to clean out loose particles.

Dampen the entire area. Use a commerically prepared patch to which you simply add water. Mix only what you need immediately. Fill the opening, making it slightly higher than the surrounding area. Then level it off.

For leveling, use a wooden board if the area is rough, a metal trowel if it is smooth. Keep the spot damp for several days.

Check the brickwork around the house, especially brick steps. Loose and crumbling mortar will loosen the bricks. Eventually the steps will become dangerous.

Clean out the joint of all crumbling mortar. Use a chisel or other sharp tool to scrape the surface. When the joints are clean, mosten them. Use a ready-mix mortar and force between the bricks with a pointing trowel. Smooth out to match the other joints.

Repairing mortar joints is known as pointing and should be done regularly. Mostly it will be done for neatness but it also will prevent trouble before it develops.

Masonry repairs of any kind should be done when all danger of frost is past. To do it too soon is to end up with trouble.

When you purchase patching materials, specify what you want. The mixtures are far different for a concrete drive and the mortar between bricks.

You can do your mixing in a coffee can, a bucket or the pan of a wheelbarrow — depending on how much you are mixing.

Clean out the container and your tools as soon as you finish and before the remnants of patching material start to harden.

Conventional Styling Plan

By JACK McELENEY

PROVIDENCE, R.I.

Conventional styling of the split level design creates a four-bedroom home of efficiency and comfort in today's plan, called "The Version". It is a new conception in tri-level design that provides a fourth bedroom and at the same time keeps the unbelievable dimensions of 39 feet x 26 feet for the basic house.

The exterior, with low sloping roof line, overhanging eaves, modern glass areas and a combination of vertical siding and cement plaster or asbestos finish, speaks for itself.

On the interior "The Version" provides comfortable living on all three of its levels. Two of the bedrooms occupy the first level, a half flight down from the main living area. The other two bedrooms are located directly above and are another half flight up from the main living area. There are two full bathrooms on each of these levels and all bedrooms have sliding door closets. The main living area contains the required living room, dining room and kitchen. The arrangement, however, is not exactly conventional, inasmuch as the large living room occupies the full length of the house at the rear, and as such enjoys isolation from general through traffic. The front entrance opens to the side of the dining room which adjoins a front kitchen ideally suited to the modern methods of planning.

"The Version" is the type of a house that can be consturcted on either a level or sloping plot of land, and the full basement under the lving area can, if desired, be changed to a crawl space or concrete slab constuction.

Including the garage the shape of the house occupies a space 39 feet long by 26 feet-24 feet and contains 1,440 square feet of living space plus 280 square feet for the garage.

Complete working plans are available at moderate cost by using the accompanying coupon.

Works Wonders

A most reliable check for a kitchen plan is what is called the work triangle.

Measure the distance from the front edge of your sink to the front of the range, the range to the refrigerator, and the refrigerator to the sink. This path across the floor should not be less than 4 feet nor more than 7 feet with the exception of the path from the refrigerator to the range, which could be 8 or 9 feet.

Those who bear in mind the work triangle when planning a new kitchen will have a beautifully planned kitchen.

"I WANT A POOL FOR MY FAMILY"

You want the best pool, Paddock Gunite.

Our files are filled with stacks of convincing reasons for our claim that Paddock Gunite Pools are the best.

One reason is that during a half century of pool design and installation, we knew the importance of specialization.

No one crew can know everything about a subject as complex as swimming pool construction, so we have craftsmen trained thoroughly in individual phases. One Paddock crew excavates, another crew places the steel frame — on which still a different crew will apply the Gunite concrete pneumatically. Another crew for the Marcite finish, and so it's done until your Paddock Pool is ready to be filled with water, ready for your family's use.

That's the way we do it: specialized crews, each expert in its own phase of Paddock Gunite Pool construction.

We invite you to ask questions and order your family's pool now. Over 500 shapes and sizes to choose from. Financing is easily arranged.

Two and Two Make Four

Silver (Dollar) Also Has Advantages

By MORT REED

All that glitters (profitably) is not necessarily gold. Silver has its advantages too. Especially if it is in the form of a United States dollar. For it just so happens that while five dimes or two quarters may equal a half-dollar, or vice versa; two half dollars are not quite the equivalent of a silver dollar. At least not in intrinsic value.

The 90 per cent pure silver content of a pre-1965 United States dime is 34.722 grains. The pure silver content of a quarter is 2.5 times that or 86.805 grains and the content of a half-dollar is exactly five times that of a dime or twice that of a quarter dollar. Precisely 173.61 grains.

But we have a bonus in the United States silver dollar. Although it is 10 times the value of a dime; four times the value of a quarter and twice the value of a half-dollar, it contains 371.25 grains of pure silver or 24.03 more grains than any combination of the lesser denominations in the amount of one dollar.

It is important only in the event you contemplate selling a hoard of silver coins for other than their numismatic value. Silver dollars not considered to be collectors' items are still bringing more than their silver market value on the open market, and while the Commodities Exchange will not accept dollars in less than $1,000 bags at a fixed exchange value, there are many sources offering a fair price for anything from one to a 1,000 silver dollars delivered.

To accurately determine the value of a United States silver coin, it is first necessary to ascertain the exact amount of pure (.999 Fine) silver in its composiiton. This applies to foreign coins as well, provided you know the percent of silver in its composition and its purity prior to being alloyed.

Normally, every silver coin struck before the turn of the century has at least a minor numismatic value that should keep it from being destroyed simply for its precious metal content. Similarly, several 20th century issues are of some value to collectors, and for that reason it would be advisable to determine what is and what is not worth more than its intrinsic value before disposing of the lot. One apparently insignificant coin could be worth many times the value of the entire lot put together.

A silver dime contains 34.722 grains or .0723375 ounces of pure silver. A quarter contains 86.805 grains or .18084375 ounces. A half dollar 173.61 grains or .3616875 ounces, and a dollar 371.25 grains or .7734375 ounces. Multiply the fractional ounce given for a particular coin by the spot market price of pure silver and you have the value of your coin. For example: Ten silver dimes with a composition of 347.22 grains or .723375 Troy ounces of .999 Fine silver at a market price of $2.27 per ounce would be worth $1.64. A silver dollar with .7734375 Troy ounces multiplied by $2.27 would show a value of $1.76.

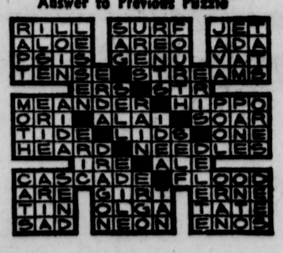
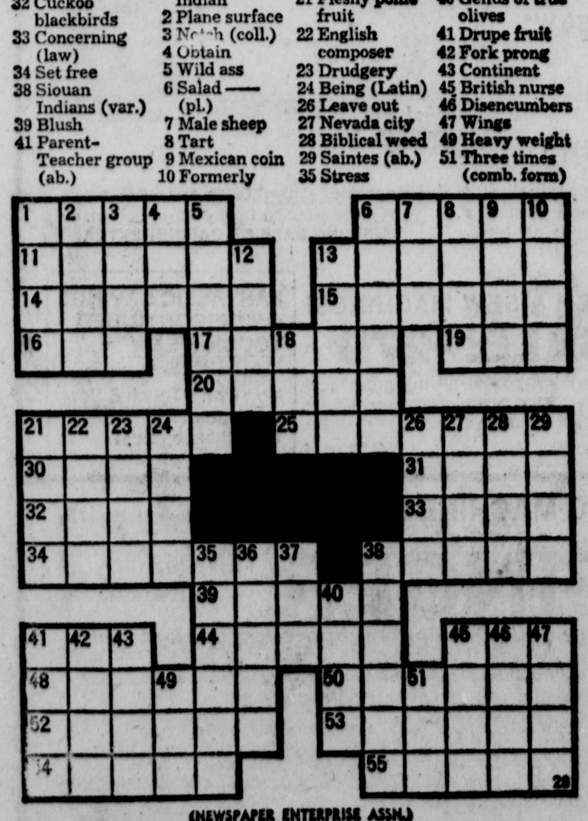
Answer to Previous Puzzle





Bridge By Oswald & James Jacoby

Everything Wrong, Slam Is In

Some years ago the late Albert Morehead, one of the greatest bridge analysts of all time, pointed out that in total point and IMP team matches it never paid to risk a big swing by letting your opponents make a redoubled, doubled or even undoubled slam contract.

Here is a hand from an important match in the early '60s to illustrate this.

South's jump to six hearts was a frightful bid. His redouble even worse but he came out with all the marbles.

West opened the ace of diamonds. East signalled with the eight and West led a second diamond, whereupon the slam came home.

Both East's diamond signal and West's diamond continuation were very bad plays. South had tried to use Blackwood and West's five-club call had made it impossible for North to show aces in the catch-as-catch can system he was using.

Hence it was very likely that South held two singletons and a club shift was indicated.

However, West should not have doubled and East should have gone to seven clubs. Seven clubs would only be down one with a spade lead.

At the other table South played in and made a safe and sane five hearts so a seven-club call would have produced a nice profit against even the best defense.

NEW ADVANCED EQUIPMENT—Dr. David S. Gerbarg (R), chairman of the Department of Medicine of Benedictine Hospital, shows new wireless heart monitoring equipment recently installed in the Benedictine Coronary Care Unit. (L) Dr. Kenneth M. Bremer, chairman of the Department of Family Practice; Dr. John A. Olivet, medical director; Jeanne Biedrzycki RN and Dr. Gerbarg.

Heart Monitoring Most Advanced

KINGSTON — The most technologically advanced system of monitoring heart patients, a wireless system of watching all proved cases of myocardial infarction, has been installed at Benedictine Hosptial, according to announcement made today by Dr. John A. Olivet, medical director.

Patients, including those who may walk around with no wire attachments and carry nothing bigger than a small transmitter, the size of a pocket radio, may be monitored.

The equipment was recommended by the Cornery Care Unit Committee of Benedictine Hospital, according to Dr. David S. Gerbarg, chairman of the Department of Medicine and Dr. Kenneth M. Bremer, chairman of the Department of Family Practice.

All proved heart patients, once they leave the coronary care unit, are monitored for a period of one week to pick up later catastrophic events, should they occur. The precentage of recurrance is occasional and the new system produces less interference than other models and produces a better picture.

The equipment also has a memory loop which stops the system on command and tells the physicain what happened six to 12 seconds before any irregularities occured.

MARK HOSPITAL WEEK—Copies of public decrees designating National Hospital Week in Ulster County were presented by Ulster County Legislature Chairman Peter J. Savago, (R-Dist. 8) to officers of both the Benedictine and Kingston Hospital Auxiliaries. National Hospital Week will be observed May 6 through 12. Accepting the decrees from Savago are Mrs. Howard Buck (L), president of Benedictine Hospital Auxiliary and Mrs. LeRoy Stoothoff, secretary of Kingston Hospital Auxiliary.

Savago Proclaims Hospital Week

The week of May 6 through 12 was designated as National Hospital Week in a public decree issued by County Legislature Chairman Peter J. Savago in which he urges the citizens of Ulster County to take cognizance of this event and support a fitting observance.

Savago said that "The second week in May has traditionally been designated as National Hospital Week. This year the theme is "Your Hospital . . . A Caring Community. Your Health . . . Our Common Concern."

"On this occasion Ulster County joins with the Nation in paying tribute to the dedicated people who serve in the hospitals, who provide skilled and compassionate health care to our citizens.

"The hospitals in this community have a new commitment —providing a framework for maintaining the health of the entire population. The state and county health departments share this commitment. Through forward-looking programs they are endeavoring to see that new health care facilities are provided where they are most needed.

"In recognizing dedicated people who serve in the hospitals, it is most fitting that mention is made of the Benedictine and Kingston Hospital auxiliaries which embodies more than 1,000 members. Many of these serve as volunteers in the two hospitals in many ways—manning the auxiliary sales carts which tour the facility every day for the convenience of patients; serving as clerks in the gift shops; delivering flowers and mail to patients; sponsoring junior volunteers program (candystripers), along with many other volunteer services.

"Auxiliary members further contribute their time and effort in many fund raising activities with the resulting funds donated to the hospitals."

Northern Dutchess To Mark Observance

RHINEBECK — A "Meet Your Hospital Night" will be held at Northern Dutchess Hospital May 9 in conjunction with National Hospital Week, being celebrated throughout the country.

Theme of the progam will be "Everything you've wanted to know about hospitals, but were afraid to ask."

In announcing the public program, Michael C. Mazzarella, administrator, stated that the purpose of the 7 p.m. activities is to give the communiy an opportunity to meet department heads and staff, to observe the work of each department, and to ask questions of those most directly concerned.

Hospital Night will be conducted as an open house tour, during which the following departments may be visited: physical therapy; inhalation therapy; extended care facility; recreational therapy; social services; dietary; purchasing; laboratory; X-ray; intensive care and coronary units; and operating rooms.

Young people are especially urged to attend to receive health career counseling from representatives of the nursing staff.

A color slide presentation, "The Impatient Patient," will be shown for the first time. It was written and directed by members of the hosptial staff, including Sander Heyman, development fund director; Evy Navy, public relations director; and Marquia Morse, vice president, board of directors. "Star" of the presentation is Bob Schultz.

Also featured will be presentation of special certificates to blood doners of the past year, with words of welcome from Dr. Megdalia Arnan, director of laboratory services.

'Rules of Prayer' Reviewed

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International

In moments of acute distress or sudden relief, prayers may rise spontaneously from a human heart.

"God help me!" and "Thank God!" are two of the most basic prayers a person can say.

But except in highly emotional situations, prayer does not "come naturally" to anyone. It is a discipline to be practiced, an art to be learned.

Jesus taught his disciples several very practical rules for learning to pray. Of first importance, he indicated, is regularity.

If prayer is to move beyond rote recitation of "gimmes" to its proper objective of direct communion with God, it must be an habitual discipline. Pray every day —preferably at the same time —whether you feel like it or not. Look upon your prayers as a daily appointment with God and allow nothing or no one to intrude upon it.

Privacy Essential

Many days you will feel "dry" and have no sense of being in communication with God. But prayers offered at such times, out of simple obedience, may be even more rewarding spiritually than those accompanied by felt exultation or peace.

Privacy also is essential to prayer. Find a place where no one can interrupt you, so that you can concentrate completely on your prayers. Time and posture are not important to God —but may be important to you. Some people pray best early in the morning, before their minds are cluttered with worldly concerns. Others prefer to pray just before going to sleep at night. Some do both.

Many find that kneeling —a physical act connoting humility and suppliance —promotes a prayerful mood. But it is equally appropriate to sit or stand. You also can pray lying down, but there is a risk of drifting off to sleep before you complete your prayers.

Every prayer should contain some words of praise and thanksgiving. This is the very least we owe God: a grateful acknowledgment of His love and goodness towards us.

Prayers of Petition

Prayers for forgiveness may suitably follow. They need not be accompanied by agonized attempts to feel remorseful. Christ taught that God always is more ready to forgive than we to seek forgiveness. Most important about prayers for forgiveness is that they be honest —without self-justifying alibis —and specific, dealing with concrete wrongs we have done to others rather than vague generalities.

Finally, we may offer what are called prayers of petition. In these, we ask things, first for others whom we know to be in trouble or need, and then for ourselves. One need not feel abashed about praying for help with a family or business problem. Jesus taught his disciples to ask for such a mundane thing as daily bread.

If you have trouble finding words in prayer, it is perfectly all right to use the words of others. You may say the Lord's Prayer or read one of the many prayers in the Book of Psalms. Or you may use a modern prayer book in which prayers for various occasions are collected.

When using a prayer composed by someone else, it is essential to read or say it slowly, identifying yourself with each thought freely and interpolating private thoughts of your own as they come into your mind.

Be Brief

For example, you can pack all of your worldly cares and concerns into one line of the Lord's Prayer —"Give us this day our daily bread" —if you think of it as a way of asking God's help with your troubles, which He already knows all about.

Jesus' final admonition about prayer was: be brief. Only a great saint can sustain a genuine mood of prayerfulness for more than a few minutes. Jesus said long-winded prayers may be empty ones. But a cry from the heart may take only a second.

Church View On Gaming

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States, much of which in the past sponsored gambling officially and then outlawed it, is reviving the practice again in many places.

A "gambling explosion" is on, says the Rev. Dr. Paul M. Minus Jr., of Delaware, Ohio, a professor of church history.

Although the churches generally have remained silent on the matter in recent times, he says they should take up the ethical issues involved in the "country's drift toward the questionable values of a gambling culture."

The particular target of his criticisms, made in the ecumenical weekly, Christian Century, is the spreading pattern of state-run lotteries, legalized in eight states in the last nine years.

Similar steps are being considered in 10 other states. At least 10 states also are thinking of following New York City's lead into the business of operating off-track betting parlors or horse races.

Although most Protestant churches, particularly Methodists and Baptists, traditionally have opposed gambling and hotly challenged widespread moves 18 years ago legalizing bingo games, there has been scant religious reaction to the present trend.

The current moves for state lotteries and other gambling activities are being pressed as a means of raising needed additional revenue without intensifying the upward spiral of already painfully high taxes.

While Roman Catholicism does not consider gambling sinful in itself, many of its leaders lately have discouraged bingo as a means of fund-raising, but have had little to say about the spread of state gambling operations.

Dr. Minus, who teaches at Ohio's Methodist Theological School, says that for the churches to ignore the expanding gambling pattern is to deny their responsibility to the poor.

He says that while state lotteries attract about the same proportion of participants of each economic stratum, from high-income people to the impoverished, it is the poor who are victimized.

Dr. Minus contends that "in spite of aggressive merchandising, state lotteries have not netted as much revenue" as predicted — usually only a fraction of a per cent of the state budget. Nor, he adds, have they crippled operations of illegal gambling syndicates.

The TV Cartrivision Revolution Has Arrived and Ulsterites Can Tune In Strong at Lions Expo

By TOBIE GEERTSEMA

COLUMBO ON THURSDAY? . . . Or Johnny Carson at noon? Or "The Secret Storm" at midnight?

Why not? Cartrivision is here, allowing viewers all that and much, much more — for a price.

And everybody is agreed on one thing — Cartrivision spells out a revolution in entertainment; may well be the biggest thing ever in that field. The handwriting is on the wall, and Cartrivision is destined to replace television as the No. 1 entertainment medium.

Into a Slot

Cartrivision, in case you've been sleeping while this new idea titillated the worlds' imagaination, is a device whereby you're able to watch whatever you want, whenever you want, right there in your living room. You slip a vedeo-cartridge — about the size of a woman's evening bag — into a slot on your TV set and the screen will come alive with whatever you've chosen. It's like playing a record, with pictures. Or something like automobile stereo cartridges — only instead of plugging Aretha Franklin into your dashboard, you click "Gone With The Wind" or maybe "Mission: Impossible" into your televsion set.

Some prophets think this new gimmick will mean doom for theaters, records and perhaps even TV and radio. They reason that the public, when they can see exactly what they want exactly when they want, will hardly be satisfied with less. Maybe so. Who's going to dislike an entire Saturday night movie in your own home without commerical interruptions?

And we can just see it starting a whole new trend in snob appeal. Whereas a man was once judged by the number of selection of books in his library, his new image will be reflected by his number of selection of video-cartridges.

Men who have spent a lifetime collecting the works of Mark Twain will find themselves humbled by neighbors who have collected all of Buster Keaton's old movies on cartridges. Public libraries across the land, no doubt, will begin lending cartridges instead of books.

It's Magic

One man who's really into Cartrivision currently is Carl Markle of Markles' Television on Kingston's Washington Avenue. He'll demonstrate this magic for you in his shop, just as he did for us one recent day. And he'll demonstrate it for thousands at the Kingston Lions Exposition from May 1-5 at the N.Y. State Armory.

It's bound to be a big hit at the Expo — proving you can do anything with Cartrivision. You can watch regular TV on the big color set and be as choosey as you wish. You can put in a video cartridge if you don't like what's on — and watch a full-length feature film without a single commerical interruption.

A trip to the theatre? Orson Welles and Marcel Marceau await you. A little music? Everything's available from Mozart and Bach to country western. Sports? Take your pick from the Indianapolis 500 and Super Bowl 1 to Muhammad Ali vs. George Chuvalo and Joe Louis against Max Schmeling. Art, home arts and crafts, gourmet cooking, wham-zap children's education films — anything and everything.

And that's not all. You can record a program right off the air, whether your'e home or not. And play it back whenever you like. Or, you can become a famous TV director with no training necessary — because you can even video tape and play back your own home productions, complete with sound.

Gigantic — colossal — stupendous? All that — and a whole new ball game as well. Opera, ballet, golf (not one cartridge, but 13 different golf cartridges), a whole shelf of Dickens' stories.

At the Lions Expo, the Markle booth will be proving that TV can be fun. No commericals, no re-runs unless you want them, buy your own cartridges or rent them for a modest fee — and all you have to do is drop it in whenever the spirit moves you. Around our house that would probably mean the "Football Follies" and but, for you, it could mean "Bridge on the River Kwai," a visit to Israel, or Julia Child French Chefing her way through Roast Duck a l'Orange or Coquilles St. Jacques.

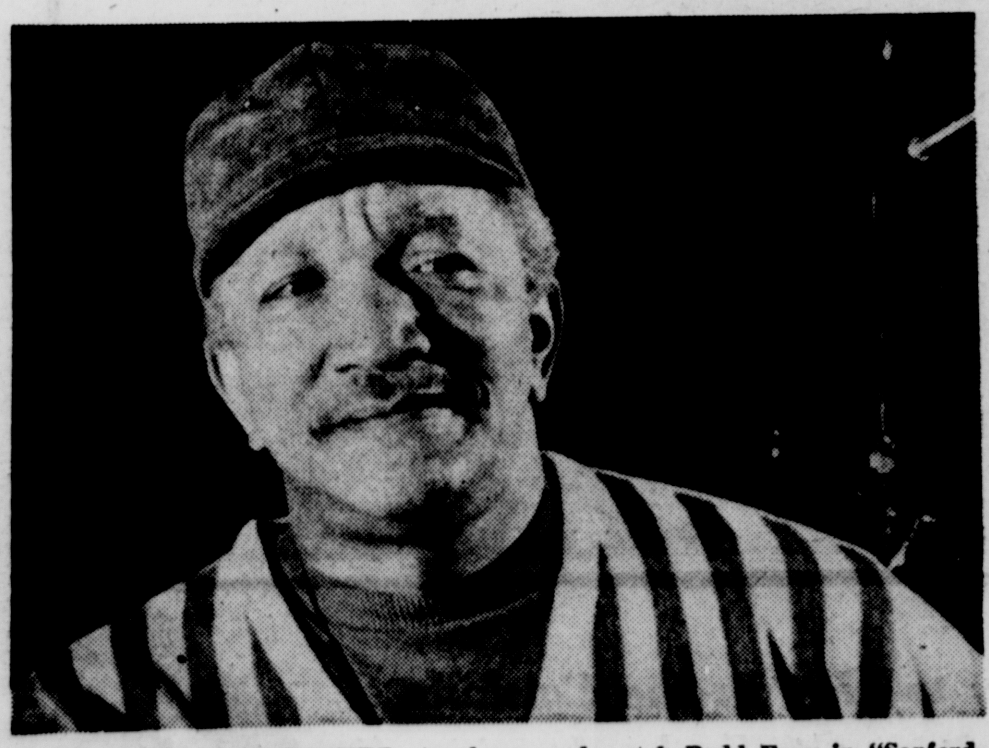
You never have to miss your favorite show and you can do your own programming. So, consult your cartridge library, dad, plan the evening's entertainment and then post a schedule on the kitchen bulletin board. It could lead to heated discussion — but it'll also be fun.

A few years back, comedian Jerry Lewis, plugging his own automated mini-theatres, said the world would never see Cartrivison. It was probably the biggest mistake he made since breaking up with Dean Martin — as Carl Markle will prove at the Lions Expo.

IF BETTY GRABLE was your pin-up favorite in the World War II trenches, you can relive the past with Cartrivision by clicking her old movies into your TV set. New and old movies are available on cartridges you can own outright via purchase or rent for a modest fee.

CARTRIVISION permits viewers to watch prerecordeded programs at home. Slip the cartridge into the TV attachment and watch your favorite football team replay the whole season; view Gary Cooper in "High Noon"; follow the complete adventures of "Roger Ramjet."

YOU ALWAYS STAY UP late to watch Ed McMahon—and, of course, Johnny Carson—but tonight you're just too tired after being out on the links all day? So, go to bed, sleepy head. Through the miracle of Cartrivision, you can see Johnny and Ed instead at noon tomorrow.



YOU'D REALLY RATHER stay home and watch Redd Foxx in "Sanford and Son," but you promised to show up at the PTA meeting? With Cartrivision, you can go to the meeting and see Redd, too. While you're over at the school talking about junior's lunch program, you can record off the air with sound—even unattended, with the built-in timer on your Cartrivision back home.

A WHOLE NEW TREND in snob appeal may be in the offing. A man may no longer be judged by the number of Mark Twain or Henry Miller books in his library, but by his number and selection of video-cartridges, especially if that collection comprises the old movies of Laurel and Hardy, clowning here in a scene from "Two Tars," one of their early comedy classics.

BILL SILL as the sculptor and Carol Casper as his girl-friend take refuge on a table in rehearsal scene from "Black Comedy." Unfortunately for them, the truth has emerged—and Debbi Curl and Michael Gallagher as Sill's debutante fiancee and her father—strike out at the romantic pair in an attempt to stab them in the dark.

Clue to 'Black Comedy'—a Porcelain Buddha

CAROL CASPER may be lovely to look at, but she turns out to be one of the most unwanted guests in stage history in "Black Comedy," the upcoming spring production of Coach House Players, being readied for staging May 17, 18 and 19 locally.

KINGSTON

Keep your eye on the lovely little porcelain Buddha when you see "Black Comedy," the Coach House Players' production which will be played on the J. Watson Baley Junior High School stage on May 17, 18 and 19 at 8:30 p.m.

It is a supposedly rare, prized possession of a character in the play whose major passion is collecting fine furniture and objets de'art. It has been ''borrowed'' without his knowledge by Bill Sill, who plays Brindsley, his across-the-hall neighbor in their apartment house, in an effort to dress up his own shabby apartment and to impress his prospective father-in-law (Michael Gallagher), coming to meet him for the first time.

On the evening of this critical visit, a fuse blows out and drenches the bauble-borrowing fellow's apartment in ptich darkness, in which he, his guests — including some unwanted and unexpected people — grope blindly about (but in full view of the audience, who can enjoy their stumblings and mix-ups under a flood of light, which is the basic joke of "Black Comedy").

Will Buddha Survive?

As people keep stumbling against doors, walls and pieces of furniture, audiences in New York, London and all the other cities were "Black Comedy" has been a roaring hit, have all felt sure that inevitably someone is going to knock over the precious Buddha, resting on the coffee-table in the center of the stage. You'll find out if they were right on opeing night.

The antique furniture and art collector neighbor Harold Gorringe will be portrayed by Roger Scholl. Roger, past president of Caoch House, most recently appeared as the con-man Sgt. Carlino in "Wait Until Dark."

He took the role of Howard in "Picnic" and Apples in "Hatful of Rain." Roger also appeared in the casts of "Pajama Game," "Goodby Charlie," "Finian's Rainbow," "Mame" and "The King and I."

One of the most unwanted guests, incidentally, is played by Carol Casper, as Clea — the girl the host is trying to jilt. Carol, a native of Michigan, moved to this area five years ago. She was seen as one of the nuns in "The Sound of Music" and took on the awsome role of Auntie Mame in "Mame." She appeared this season in "Fiddler on the Roof." Carol is a member of her local church choir and the Onteora Summer Chorus as well as being a talented artist.

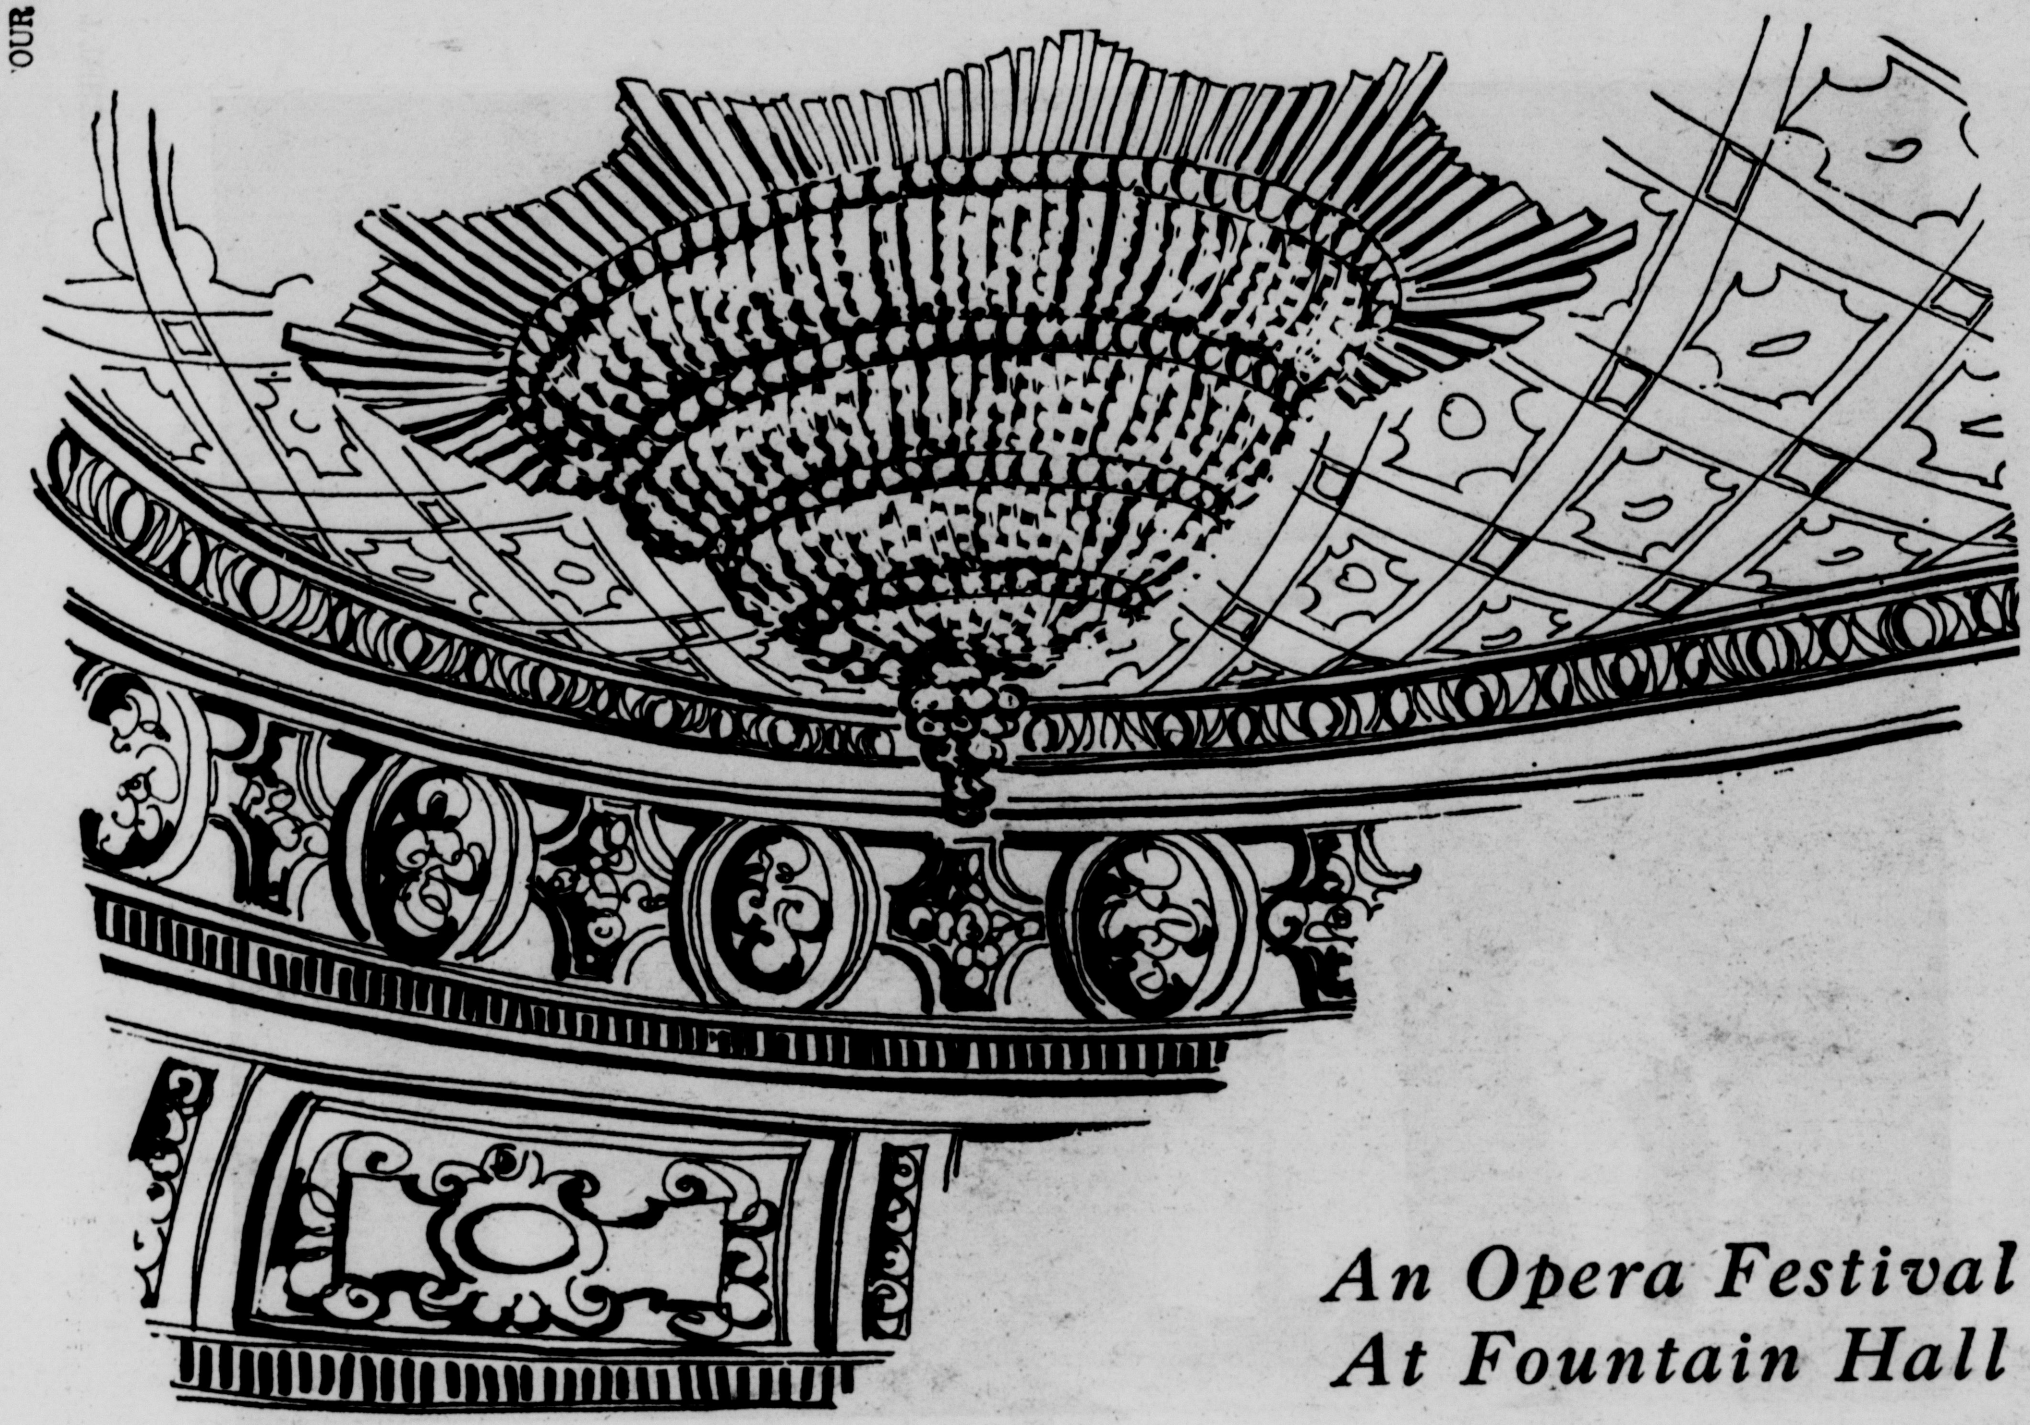
Others in Cast

Others in the cast include Debbi Curl as the fiancee Carol Melkett, Alice Van Brink as the prim-when-sober neighbor lady, Al Curl as the art-loving electrician and Wendell Scherer as Bamburger, the wealthy art patron.

Murray Rivette will direct this daffy entertainment, assisted by Betty Madonna.

Single tickets at $2.50 per seat are available by mail order by sending check and self-addressed envelope to Mrs. James Niver, Oakwood Drive, Kingston. Single tickets will also be for sale at the Bailey School May 9 and 10 from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m.

So, why not join the zany crew at No. 18 Scarlatti Gardens for an evening of fun?



An Opera Festival At Fountain Hall

WEST COPAKE

Columbia County's first funded grant to usher in a festival of opera has been awarded to the Touring Opera Company from New York City, by the New York State Council on the Arts. The Touring Company, composed of young opera singers with international reputations, will present a series of three operas for the benefit of Camphill Village, USA, Inc., at Fountain Hall, West Copake, under the auspices of The Friends of Camphill Village.

The operas, to be presented to the public on a season ticket basis of three for $10 include: 3 p.m. Sunday, May 6, Cavalleria Rusticana by Mascagni; 3 p.m. Sunday, July 15, Madame Butterfly by Puccini; 3 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 2, L'Elisir D'Amore by Donizetti.

Many of the artists of the Touring Opera Company who live in New York City, also have weekend homes in the Hudson-East Taghkanic area. Following the summer festival at Fountain Hall, they plan a festival in Virginia for the 1973-74 season which will be followed by a tour of South America. The performers hope that this community-wide cultural opportunity for music lovers throughout Columbia County to benefit Camphill Village will become the first in a series of annual future events.

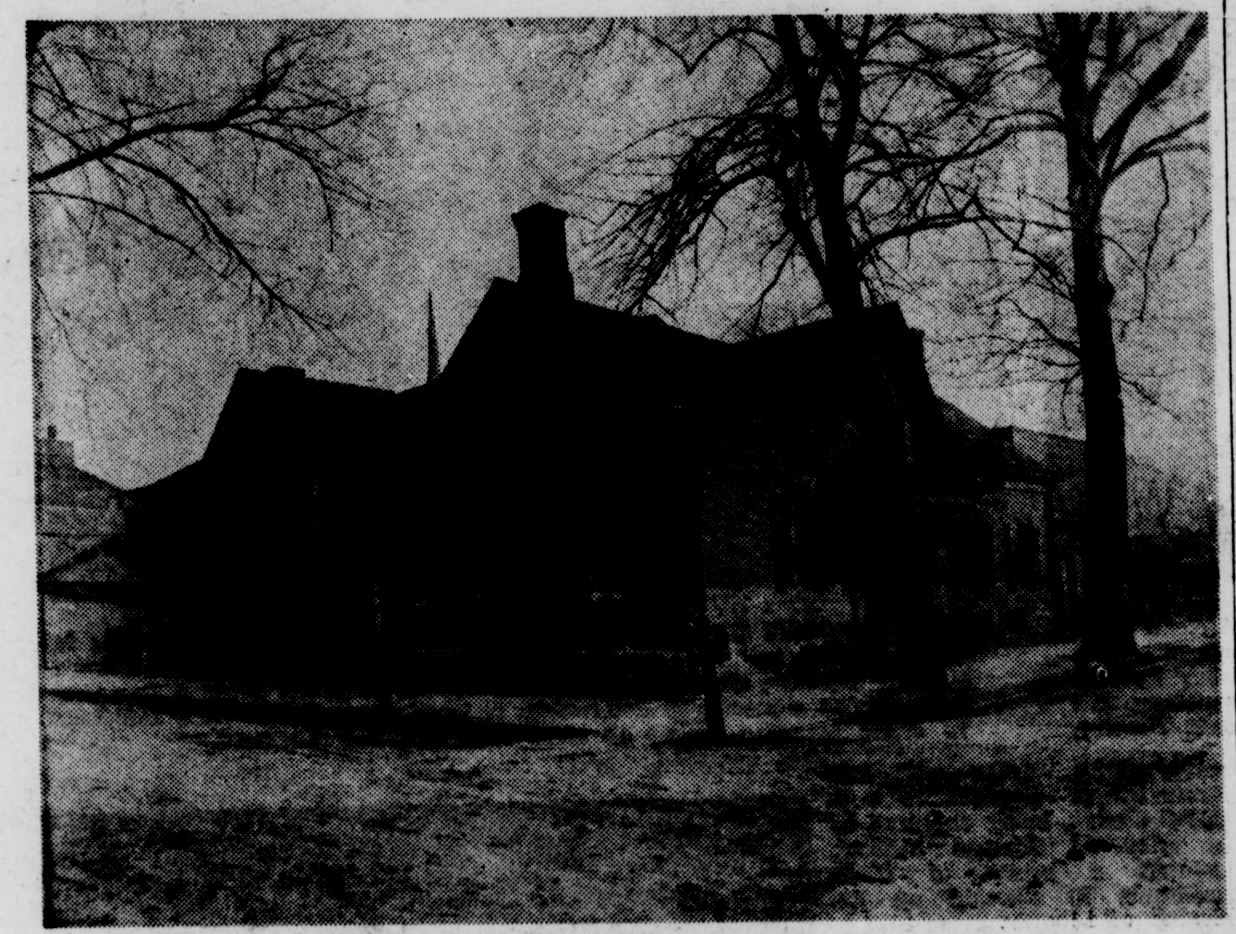
Camphill Village, USA, a 500 acre community for mentally handicapped young adults, opened in West Copake in 1961. The auditorium in Fountain Hall, with its outstanding acoustics and Steinway Concert grand piano, was made available for the three operas.

Season opera tickets are available by mailing $10 to Box 359, Hillsdale, and tickets will be forwarded.

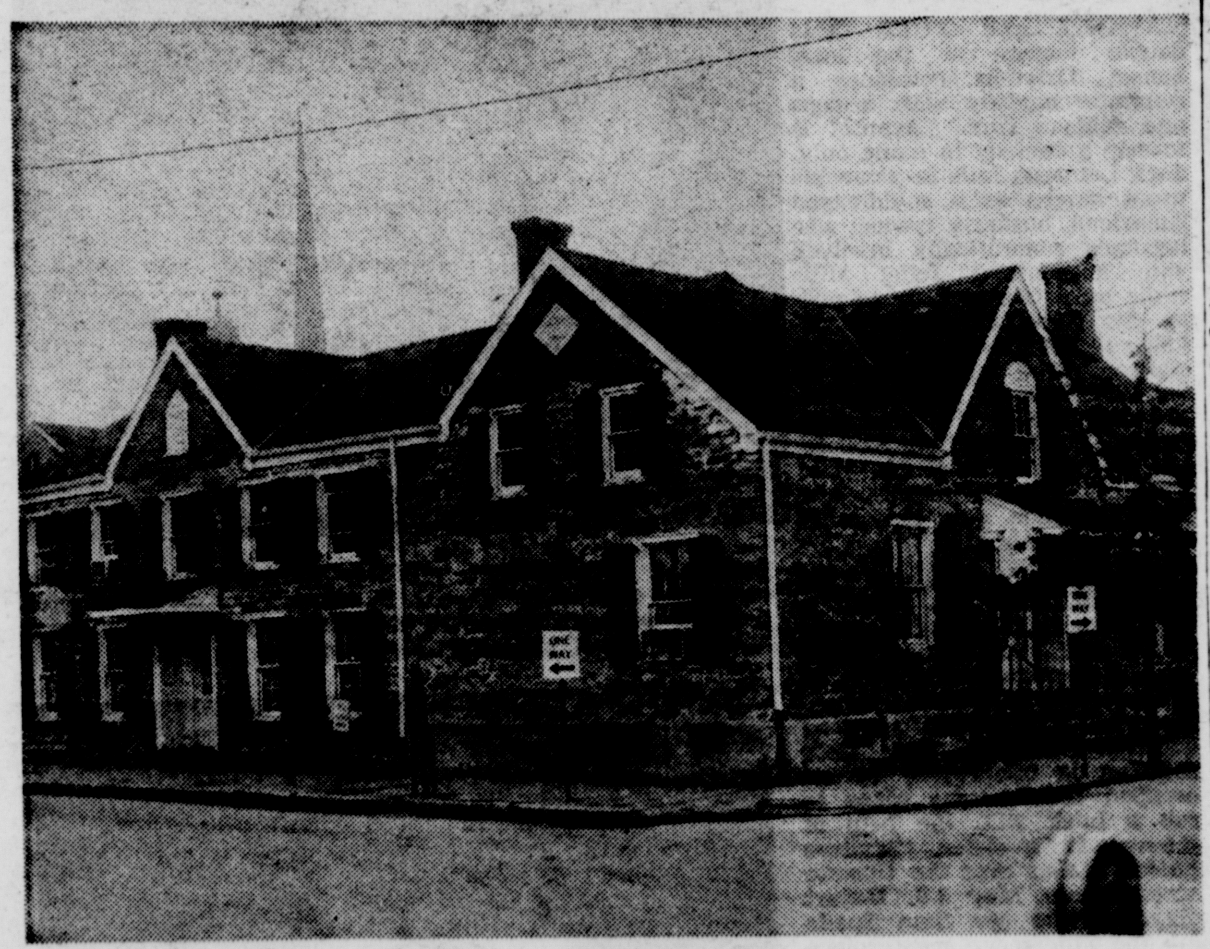
TENOR ALBERTO FIGOLS will take the role of Truiddu in "Cavalleria Rusticana," the first opera to be performed in the series of three at West Copake.

SOPRANO PRISCILLA GORDON will sing the part of Santuzza in "Cavalleria Rusticana," to be presented Sunday, May 6, 3 p.m. at Camphill Village.

Kingston—Then and Now



NOTE, IF YOU WILL, the turn-of-the-century attire worn by the lone lady on the sidewalk. And observe, too, the hitching post at mid-block and the worse-for-wear gaslight on the corner. Unpaved then were John and Crown Streets in uptown Kingston, but it mattered little since only horses passed this way at the time—and no asphalt was needed underfoot and no streetside traffic signs to guide the way. But stoically stood the old stone house on the corner, framed by massive old trees and the tall spire of the Old Dutch Church.



WHILE MUCH OF KINGSTON has changed drastically over the years, the building at 74 John Street remains much the same. Because its historic old stone architecture reflects the heritage of the past, it has been preserved intact—and brightened into well-scrubbed, newly painted stone and wood beauty. Gone today the hitching post and gaslight, along with the unpaved streets. Passed daily by thousands of automobiles, it is framed by "No Parking" and "One Way" signs and hemmed by parking meters. Gone, too, are the trees of old; replaced by younger saplings—but progress and change have not touched its ancient stones and picturesque shutters or the pointed steeple in the background.

AN ALDERFER PORTRAIT

Archetypal Symbols By Alderfers Team

WOODSTOCK

The Doug and Judy Alderfer show at the Woodstock Artists Association which has just opened is offering gallery-goers an unique opportunity to win an Alderer drawing, via purchase of a 50 cents donation ticket.

Energy transference is part of the Alderfer mode and they are anxious to keep it flowing. They themselves won the current show through a January competition at the Artists Association Gallery.

Doug and Judy make their home now in West Shokan where they work together perfecting the meticulous craft by means of which they communicate their involvement with archetypal symbols. Their dreams, the Tarot deck, even certain forms of advertising form the raw material for the Alderfer's complicated iconography. Even their very carefully executed portraits of local people are transformed through the search for significant symbols.

The drawing for the drawing on May 13 will be a special and novel event, the Alderfers have promised. Proceeds from the event will go to the Jane Burr house which provides quarters at minimal costs for deserving art students.

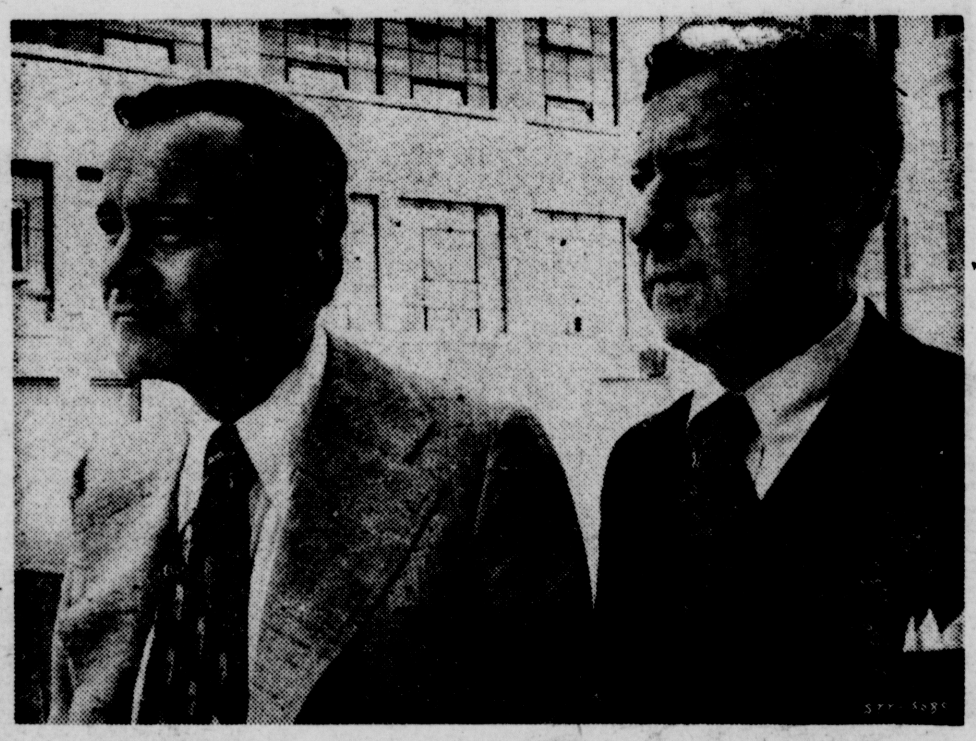
HOLD THE PHONE! . . . Reduced to three-inch size by an African witch doctor, coach Milo Jackson (TIM CONWAY) has trouble phoning for help in this scene from "The World's Greatest Athlete," Walt Disney Productions comedy about a jungle boy who becomes a super sports champ. It's currently featured at both Red Hook's Lyceum and the Rosendale Theatre.



JACK LEMMON (L) and Jack Gilford are cast as business partners in "Save the Tiger," the excellent film now featured at both Kingston's Mayfair Theatre, and Hyde Park's Roosevelt. Lemmon gives a fine performance as a man who determines to burn down one of their buildings in order to raise money to save their troubled business.

MOVIES

Save the Tiger

Recently, we found fault with Jack Lemmon in the performance he delivered in the movie, "Avanti." But, this week, we stand ready to shower Lemmon with extravagant praise for his role in "Save the Tiger," the current attraction at both Kingston's Mayfair Theatre, and Hyde Park's Roosevelt.

In "Avanti," it seemd to us that Lemmon — in middle age — was striving too hard for the boyishness he exuded in his earliest films. But, in "Save the Tiger," he is — in all respects — his middleaged self . . . and, as such, faces up to middle-class problems, as well.

"Tiger" is a remarkable good film — totally and completely adult. And adult not only in its sexual realism, but in its innate intelligence in creating contact with any audience that is not youth inhibited.

His Own Business

Lemmon plays Harry Stoner, a man who grew up in pre-World War II America and came to adulthood with the American dream in mind . . . owning a business of his own. He has gained his independence from working for others by becoming a garment manufacturer, but meeting a payroll presents far more problems that cashing a paycheck.

Honest and joyous at heart, the society of the past 20 years has victimized him until he can no longer be honest, if he is to survive. Still haunted by memories of Anzio, confused by the changing morals, unable to dream the American dream any longer, hating the smog and heat of Los Angeles, he has come to dread each day.

And the day that is important to the plot of this film is a day to be dreaded. To fill orders for his new lines of clothes and to keep his business going and his employes paid, Harry has to come up with $300,000 — and to do it without sinking further into hock. He opts for hiring a professional arsonist to burn down his plant building for the insurance — enough money to save the troubled business.

Lemmon delivers his finest performance in a serious role, so far removed from his many comedies that he hardly seems the same actor. He wages a war with nerves, he fights and squabbles, he conspires in squalid surroundings, he flatters buyers, he tries to make meaningful contact with his wife, he makes unmeaningful contact with a "now generation" rock fan.

Totally Realistic

He is, in short, great; running the gamut from humor and fear to nostalgia and sadness. He brings such realism to his part that one knows his every move and thought.

And great, too, is Jack Gilford, another long-time comic taking on a serious role as Lemmon's older partner. He is gentle, sweet and protesting. Sometimes so serene, he seems to be asleep, his face suddenly erupts in popping eyes and puffed out cheeks until the rubber-faced Gilford looks like a pot of soup coming to a boil.

The two Jacks are in good company, for the supporting cast is professionally adept: Laurie Heineman fine as the "now" girl; Thayer David expert as the arsonist; William Hansen moving as an aged garmet cutter; Lara Parker slickly real as a call girl; Harvey Jason true to life as a clothes designer.

Add an excellent screenplay and you have one of the most literate movies about present day society in many years.

The World's Greatest Athlete

A pet tiger steals the show in this Walt Disney movie, now showing at both Red Hook's Lyceum and the Rosendale Theatre. Providing much of the fun, too, are the props: a handbag for a 130-foot lady and a three-inch man, among them. The giant purse was built for a scene wherein an African witch doctor puts the whammy on coach Tim Conway, shrinking him to three-inch size. Tiny Tim tumbles into the lady's handbag and is foundered by the articles inside, including a jumbo lipstick, hairpins, compact, needle and thread, safety pins, an unstamped letter, reading glasses, cigarets, comb and brush, pills, keys, a camera, and matches.

Plot revolves around a jungle boy (Jan-Michael Vincent) who becomes the super sports champ of all time.

Up the Sandbox

Held over for a second week (through May 4) at Kingston's Community, this movie adapted from a women's lib novel about a housewife given to fantastic daydreams. Barbra Streisand stars as the Walter Mitty-type lady who takes her kids to the playground; drifts off into fantasies of a romance with Fidel Castro, being captured by a tribe of African natives, joining a group of black militants in blowing up the Statue of Liberty.

Streisand doesn't sing a note in this one — and the satire is frequently off the mark — but songbird Barbra shows her mettle as a serious actress of vast appeal.

Other Choices

AVANTI and FUZZ. This double feature at the local Sunset Drive-In combines a romantic comedy with a cops and robbers film. "Avanti" is mostly a comedy in name only. Jack Lemmon fails to glean his usual laughs as a middleaged American business tycoon who becomes romantically involved with a youthful Juliet Mills while on a trip to Italy to pick up his father's body. "Fuzz" follows the Boston cops on stakeout in a movie based on the 87th Precinct novels series. Yul Brynner is the boss cop, Raquel Welch and Tom Skerritt are two members of his force tracking down criminals, and Burt Reynolds gets thrown in for good measure.

ME AND MY GAL and THE MALTESE FALCON. "Gal," a 1932 comedy starring Spencer Tracy and Joan Bennett, plays its last performance tonight at Rhinebeck's Upstate Films. Tracy's a detective courting waitress Bennett, but their courting is interrupted by an escaped convict who plans to rob a bank with the help of Bennett's sister. Puritans Considered May Day Paganistic

Throughout the ages, May 1 has been a day of songs, dances and colorful celebrations to mark the coming of spring. More recently, it has also been a day of demonstrations in support of international labor and Socialist movements.

The exact origin of May Day is not known, but researchers feel it may have begun in the forests of ancient Britain with the Druids, a priestly cult of ancient Celts in France, England and Ireland.

When they were conquered by the Romans, the Britains developed their May Day celebration from the Roman festival Floralia. At Floralia, flowers were gathered in honor of Flora, the goddess of spring.

The Maypole

In Medieval times, May Day became one of the favorite holidays in the villages of Britain. Villagers decorated their homes and churches with flowers, sang spring carols and received gifts. They selected a king and queen of May and danced around the Maypole, holding the colored ribbons that streamed from the top.

On the Continent, May Day was a day for courting. In Italy, young lads serenaded their sweethearts. In Switzerland and Germany, a young boy would sneak up and plant a May tree beneath the window of the girl he loved. In Czechoslovakia, boys placed Maypoles outside the windows of their sweethearts, under cover of darkness.

In France, May Day marked the beginning of the month dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Young girls were named May queens in their churches and led processions in honor of the Virgin.

In the United States, May Day never became as popular as it was in the Old World. The reason may be that Puritans discouraged all celebrations, especially such "pagan" holidays as May Day. In many American cities today however, children celebrate the return of spring with singing and dancing. At May parties, in parks or schools, children select May queens and dance around the Maypole.

Since 1889, May Day has had a different meaning in the Communist world. That year a congress of world Socialist parties held in Paris voted to support the United States labor movement's demand for an eight-hour day. The Congress chose May 1, 1890, as a day of demonstrations. Afterwards, May Day became a day for Socialist demonstrations in Europe. In the Soviet Union, May Day is a national holiday, celebrated with political speeches and military parades.

Life of a King Theme of Play

WAPPINGERS

County Players will present James Goldman's "Lion in Winter" May 18 and 19. Rehearsals are reaching their final stages.

"Lion In Winter" is a comedy-drama, based on a fictional incident in the life of King Henry II of England.

Two of the main characters are King Philip of France and his sister Alias.

Phillip is portrayed by Jeff Boark, who has appeared in and directed a number of university and community theatre productions. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and the University of Washington. He has been very active in the County Players, appearing in "Don't Drink the Water," "Separate Tables," "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To the Forum," "Come Blow Your Horn," and "Funny Girl."

Phillip's sister, Alias, is portrayed by Marie Caruso. This is Miss Caruso's first part in a County Players production, but she has an extensive background in the Theatre.

At the age of 12, Miss Caruso appeared on the stage for the Children's Theatre in Parma Playhouse; has also appeared in community theatre productions in the Cain Park Youth Theatre in Cleveland Heights, Ohio and the Berea Summer Theatre in Berea, Ohio.

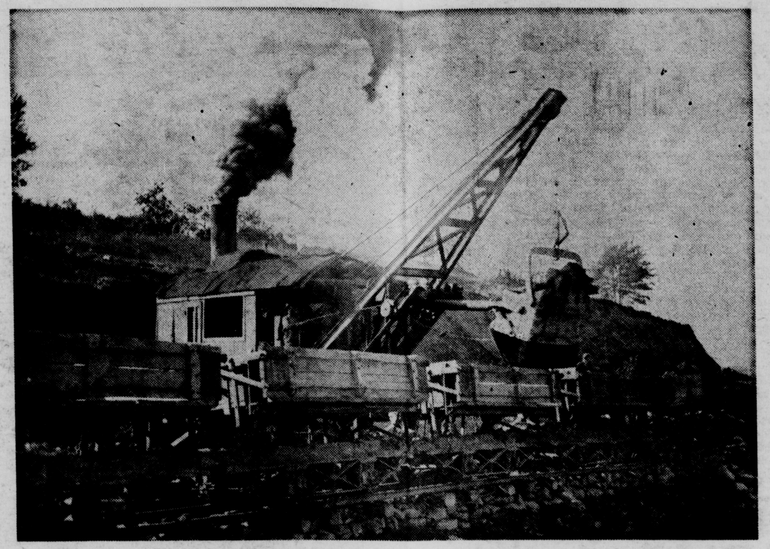
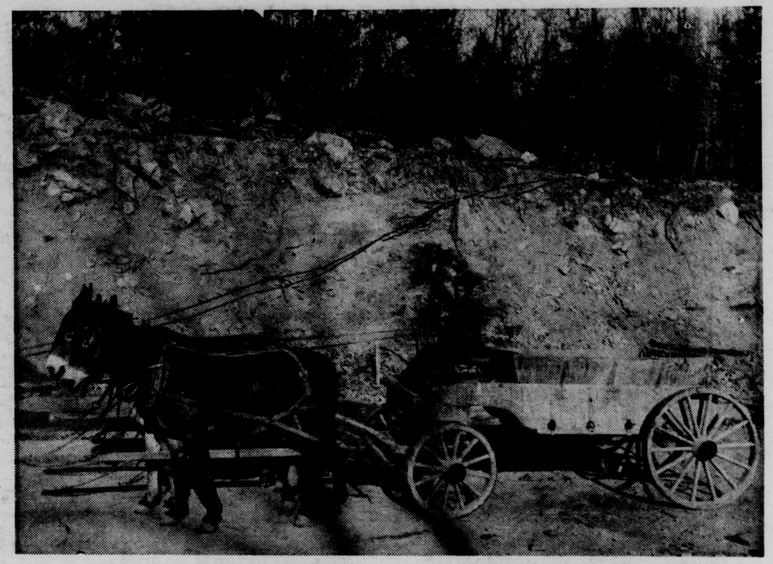
SMALL IN SIZE but capable of its job was this mini steam train used in building the Ashokan Reservoir in 1909. Laborers came to Ulster County from all over the country to build a vast new public water supply system for New York City, and when they came to Kingston to whoop it up, folks here called them "The Noisy Water Boys"; said they were all "hell raisers."



STEAM SHOVEL loads dirt at the Ashokan dam in 1909. It was one of the very few utilized in mammoth operations involved in building the Ashokan Reservoir. It proved highly necessary in digging out the west channel of the man-made lake that became a bitter draught to Town of Olive residents. New York City's cup of water destroyed six of the town's hamlets and villages.



WITH LITTLE of the heavy earthmoving equipment so familiar today available to workers on the reservoir, the work of building the dam and the waters it contained was back-breaking labor. Thousands of acres of trees and wood were chopped by hand. Land was cleared by pick, shovel, mules and hard labor. Power saws were unknown, and men and mules like these accomplished the miracle.

It Was The Greatest Building Miracle Of Its Time In 1909

By TOBIE GEERTSEMA

There are still people living in Ulster County who first saw the light of day in hamlets and villages that have long since disappeared from the map. They lived then in the bustling communities of Brown's Station, Brodhead, and Olive City.

And there are still others who have always called West Shokan, Shokan, and Boiceville home. But, in order to do so, they had to rebuild entire new towns and rename them after the original communities that had once borne that postmark.

For these were the six then-thriving hamlets and villages that were wiped off the face of the land forevermore in exchange for millions of gallons of water for the thirsty population of New York City. They were doomed to extinction on a June day in 1907, when the contract for a Catskill aqueduct was signed.

Cheers and Tears

Thousands on the sidewalks of New York cheered the signing as the ink dried, but hundreds more in the villages destined to be displaced wept. The contract meant that the Ashokan Reservoir would inexorably flood 12,000 acres of Ulster land — and that those who lived in its path would be forced to move. Condemnation was the name of the game, and as the political dice were rolled, schools, churches, homes, cemeteries, railroad stations, boarding houses and businesses became bittersweet memories only.

When the 132-million gallons of water in the new man-made lake that was the Ashokan finally lapped against the main dam and sluiced down the spillway, the prideful Town of Olive had been reduced from 37,370 acres to only 25,370. Six of its rural communities were gone and, with them, beautiful old churches, thriving tanneries and taverns, miles of railroad tracks and plank roads.

But what remained of Olive carried on, always in the knowledge that the city's cup of water had been their bitter draught. The reservoir, hailed as the greatest engineering miracle of its time, had quenched the thirst of the city's boroughs; would keep them washed down, slicked up, reasonably santitized and healthy. But it had taken its toll in human terms through chaos, up-heaval, destruction and death.

Last week, the Olive that remains kicked off its Sesquicentennial Celebration and, in looking back over its 150 years, found itself remembering 10 years on the Reservoir, as well.

For it took an entire decade to accomplish the task — from the day the first shovel of dirt was taken out to the day the first passenger in a rig passed over the dam when it was finally opened.

And, as the Sesquicentennial Celebration continues through the summer and early fall of 1973, memories of the dispossessed will mingle with those of the mammoth operation involved in building the reservoir.

The Music Changed

Up at the work site in the beginning (1907-08), the laborers who had come from all over the country sang as they shoveled and dug, cleared and burned. They sang of the back-breaking work and of whooping it up in Kingston. Later, when the job dragged on and the years rolled past, the songs changed. By 1914-15 they were homesick and tired of the cold, damp work in the swamps.

Few will argue that it was one of the greatest engineering feats of its time. For millions of tons of earth and rock had to be moved — and moved, too, hundreds of houses and sawmills and shops. Entire railroad lines and roads had to be rerouted. And most of it had to be done by men and mules for, in that unmechanized era, steam shovels were few and far between and power saws were unknown.

Heavy earthmoving equipment had not yet been invented, and trees and wood were chopped by hand. Land was cleared by pick, shovel, mules and brutally hard labor. In the face of all this, it had to be the modern wonder of the world for its time when the spring fresh water of the Catskills began to pour into New York.

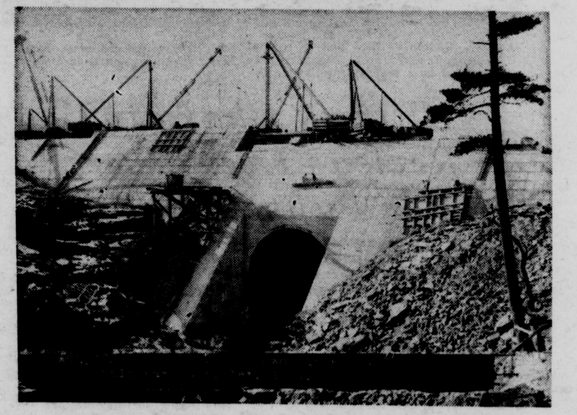
There are people in Olive today who will tell you in anger that many who lost their homes and houses because of the reservoir died long before their time of broken hearts, if not at their own hands as suicides. But they will tell you, too, that many of the imported black and Italian laborers also paid life's highest price.

Accidents and Disease

Lives were lost in the mangle that was the stone crusher. Others died when a scaffold on the lower side of the dam broke and sent men tumbling down the lower slope to the ground below. Still more were the victims of sickness in the "camptown" that housed them — a ghetto-like hodge-podge of ramshackle shacks, bars and cookhouses.

New York, after 10 long years of waiting, had its overflowing cup of water in the engineering miracle that had cost $30.5-million in hard cash — and an unestimated cost in human terms. But, for the Town of Olive, it was a bitter chalice for many years. In time it became half the life of the town in those construction days and, today, it is so much a part of life that newcomers have to be told it is not a natural lake harking back to time immemorial.

Now, these many years later, it is both a part of the local landscape and a part of history. And, as such, as much a part of the Town of Olive Sesquicentennial Celebration as the first settlers, the first grant of land, the earliest church and schools and industries — even the Shokan Fort.



WORK HAD PROGRESSED considerably on the main dam of the Ashokan Reservoir when this photo was made in the early winter of 1909. It shows the down stream face of the dam. Hailed as the greatest engineering feat of its time when finally completed, it took its toll in terms of human life.

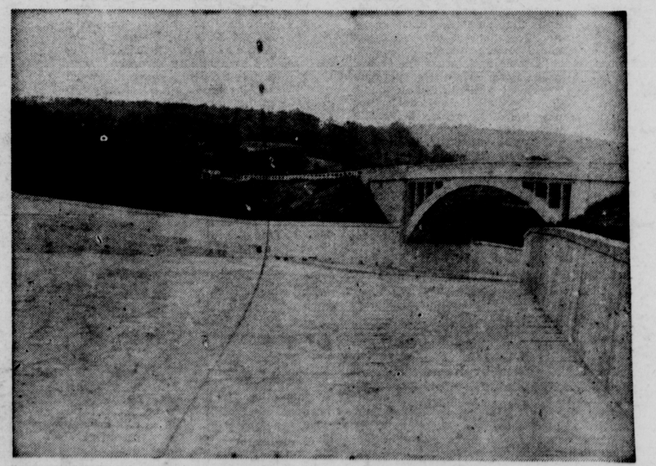
LAYING THE RIPRAP was a risky job and many workmen paid the highest price that life demands. Some 40 blacks and Italians lost their lives in accidents on the pyramid-like walls, in the mangle that served as the stone crusher, and on scaffolds that broke without warning.



SPILLWAY of the Ashokan Reservoir was ready to handle the capacity of 132-million gallons of water that the mand-made lake would now contain when this photo was made in 1914. Still waterless at the time, it would shortly become a roaring, raging, frothy waterfall.

LARRY BERTHELSON and a trio of the life-size rod puppets from "Sleeping Beauty," to be seen Saturday, May 19 at Kingston High School auditorium in a matinee performance.

'Utterly Charming' Reviews Everywhere For Puppets Ballet

KINGSTON

Wherever the Pickwick Puppet Theater presents its performance of "Sleeping Beauty," rave reviews follow in its wake.

When the puppets took to the stage of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, they stole the show. Critic Norman Nadel hailed "the jewel-like loveliness of this utterly charming, imaginative and tasteful adaptation of the fairy tale set to music for ballet by Tchaikovsky." He also called the puppets "unique" — and that they are: all slender figures mounted on flexible rods and manipulated from below and costumed as only an artist could costume them.

"Charming" was the word used again when the puppets appeared with the Philharmonic Pops up in Buffalo. Local critics were smitten with the castle with windows and drawbridge gate, with the Lilac Fairy and the Bad Witch, the lovely Princess, and the puppet Prince, and the puppet trumpeteers and cymbal crasher. "Entrancing, one and all," they wrote of these life-size puppets, including a fire-breathing dragon.

A Fine Art

It is obviously a show to delight children and it treats the ageless fable as a fine art as it beautifully captures the imagination of young people (or old people, for that matter).

With such advance notices, the Pickwick Puppets should attract a large audience when they bring "Sleeping Beauty" to the auditorium of Kingston High School on the afternoon of Saturday, May 19. The performance will be sponsored by the Kingston Chapter of the American Association of University Women, with proceeds going toward scholarship and fellowship grants for graduate study to a graduating UCCC student planning to continue her studies for a college degree.

Tickets for "Sleeping Beauty" are $1, and will be on sale shortly in local shops and through AAUW members.

English Staffer Reviews a Book

Mrs. Sherry Solomon, an Assistant Professor of English at Ulster County Community College, has written a review for the New York State Teacher Magazine on the children's book, "Walk Together."

The book, written by Nancy Henderson, contains five plays on human rights. Although geared for children on the fourth grade level, Mrs. Solomon reports they make all readers aware of the struggles "man has had in pursuing and enjoying constitutionally guaranteed rights."

She says that each play, while dramatizing some aspect of the civil rights with which each citizen is endowed, presents the tyranny, cruel and unjust use of power and flagrant abuse individuals and groups have endured to secure and maintain those rights.

A resident of Ellenville, Mrs. Solomon has been on the UCCC faculty since 1966 and formerly advised a student drama group on campus. She earned her B.S. and M.S. degrees, with majors in English, from the State University College at New Paltz.

CLAUDE MONTEUX will conduct the Haydn Festival Orchestra in the first of the "Woodstock Holiday Series"—a concert of music by Mozart and Haydn during the afternoon of Mother's Day, May 13, at Woodstock Playhouse.

Woodstock Holiday Series a Teaming Of HV Orchestra And Shakespeare

It'll be a "Woodstock Holiday Series," say Kenneth Fricker, manager of the Hudson Valley Philharmonic and Philip Meister, artistic director of the National Shakespeare Company at the Woodstock Playhouse, who have announced a series of concerts by the Hudson Valley Philharmonic at the Woodstock Playhouse. The first of the "Woodstock Holiday Series" will be the Haydn Festival Orchestra conducted by Claude Monteux in the afternoon of music by Mozart and Haydn at 3 p.m., Mother's Day, May 13.

Monteux, who is conductor and music director of the Hudson Valley Philharmonic, is currently celebrating his 14th season as music director of the HVP. During annual European tours, he has been a guest conductor of the London Symphony, the London Philharmonic and of orchestras in Berlin, Paris, and Brussels. In this country, Monteux has conducted frequently in New York City.

For its second concert, the Hudson Valley Philharmonic and the National Shakespeare Company will present the Concord String Quartet, at 3 p.m. on Sunday, May 27, of the Memorial Day weekend. Already recognized as a leading quartet in its generation, The Concord String Quartet was the recipient of the prestigious 1972 Walter Naumburg Chamber Music Award. This honor brought them to their New York debut in Alice Tully Hall and the commission and the premiere of George Rochberg's Third String Quartet. Their excellence on the concert stage has shown audiences across the country the dynamism they can bring to three centuries of chamber music.

They play — and play brilliantly — music from Mozart and Beethoven, to Schubert and Dvorak, to Bela Bartok, John Cage and Witold Lutoslawski.

The final concert of the spring season will be an all Mozart Program, presented at 3 p.m, on Sunday, June 17, Father's Day.

In presenting the "Woodstock Holiday Series", Philip Meister of the National Shakespeare Company feels the first step in changing the Woodstock Playhouse from a summer stock theatre into a regional arts center is being accomplished. Program planning is taking place to bring concert artists, dance companies, and theatre companies to the center. A more important aspect of the NSC programming is the development of a performance schedule for the fall with other arts organizations of the mid-Hudson Valley. All of these are to be presented in conjunction with the spring-summer-fall festival of the National Shakespeare Company.

CONCORD STRING QUARTET will guest at second concert in Holiday Series on Sunday, May 27 at 3 p.m. at Woodstock Playhouse.

HORN PLAYER J. RICHARD WEBB

Woodwind and Brass Provide a Contrast

STONE RIDGE

The Canterbury Woodwind and Brass Ensembles will provide a contrast of woodwind and brass music when they give a concert at the Stone Ridge campus of Ulster County Community College on Wednesday, May 2, at 8 p.m.

The concert, scheduled for the John C. Quimby Auditorium, is being jointly sponsored by the College Music Department and the Student Government through a partial grant from the New York State Council on the Arts.

J. Richard Webb established both the Canterbury Woodwind and Brass Ensembles, and currently acts as both manager and horn player for the groups. He attended the University of Wisconsin and studied with the late Mark Fischer and Joseph Singer of the New York Philharmonic.

He has played with Evanston Civic Orchestra, Tokyo Philharmonic and Yokahama Symphonies, and now is principal horn player with the Hudson Valley Philharmonic as well as the group's personnel manager.

The Canterbury Brass Quintet will be playing a varied program with selections from Brahms, Fisher Tull and Bach. In addition to Webb, the group consists of Robert Lang and Paul Sundberg on trumpets, Ronald Baedke on trombone and Michael Lasater on bass trombone.

In addition to Webb, the Canterbury Woodwind Ensemble includes Paul Stebbins or the bassoon. He played with the Erie Philharmonic and currently is a student with Polisi. Other members are Timothy Vernon, piano, who has studied at Columbia University, Buffalo State University and Aspen School of Music and now is Assistant Professor at Bennett College; Michael Lewison on the oboe; and Louis Bartolone, on clarinet.

The Ensemble will perform selections from Mozart and Beethoven.

Admission is 50 cents for students and $2 for all others. Refreshments will include wine and punch. There are ticket outlets in Kingston and New Paltz and seats can be purchased at the door.

See Shakespeare

Forty students from Kingston High School journeyed to Stratford, Conn. recently to see "Measure for Measure," playing in repertory there. In addition to enjoying the award-winning and delightfully ironic urban comedy, the students viewed the Costume and Design exhibit, which displays costumes worn in various productions throughout the American Shakespeare Theatre's 19 seasons, ranging from traditional Elizabethan outfits to the death masque and blue jeans worn during the past presentation of "Henry V."

Good Start

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Graham Beckel, 22, who graduated from the American Academy of Dramatic Arts only this year, will play the starring role in "The Paper Chase" at 20th Century-Fox.

How Are Plays Born? You're Invited To Midwife & Find Out

WOODSTOCK

Ever wonder how new plays are born? Well, Saturday, May 5 at 8:30 p.m., upstairs at Deanies' Restaurant in Woodstock, you can have an insider's view of what it's like. The PLAYWRIGHTS' UNIT of Performing Arts of Woodstock (PAW) will be presenting a night of rehearsed readings. Two plays are scheduled, written by area playwrights Lance Belville and Ron Radice.

Both plays are being thoroughly rehearsed by experienced PAW directors and actors. But instead of worrying about lighting, costumes, blocking, special effects and the thousand - and - one other problems that go into a full production, the PAW casts will be concentrating on the interpretation of the plays. The performances will be polished even if the other production values are simplified.

The readings are, in a sense, tryouts — both for the writers and PAW. The authors get a chance to see how their plays work before they are committed to full, expensive productions. And PAW gets a chance to look at the plays, see how the audience reacts to them and decide whether they warrant a full production sometime later this year.

The plays came out of PAW's newly formed PLAYWRIGHTS' UNIT. They were read and discussed and rewritten in the Unit. Next Saturday night will be the first time the general public will be exposed to them. Of course, the Unit feels both plays are excellent.

Belville's play, "The Lady and the Bandit," is a comedy about a bandit who comes to a ranch to rustle some cattle and ends up making off with the lady of the house. Radice's "Holdout" is a confrontation betwee two armed men and a voluptuous woman.

Admission is free but a collection will be taken to defray the expenses of the production and help the PLAYWRIGHTS' UNIT in its work of developing area playwrights. For more information, call Edith Le Fever in West Hurley.

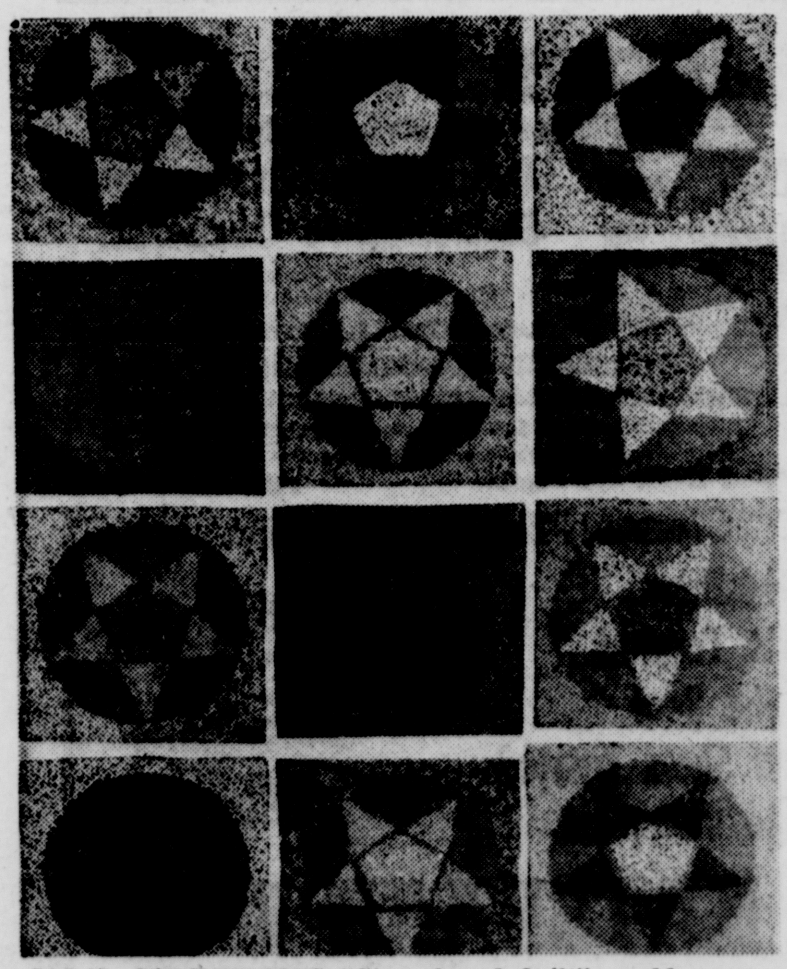
ELAINE SULKA, managing director of NSC, who has just announced the launching of a subscription campaign for Woodstock Playhouse.

Rolling Rep Sets Spring & Summer 'Subscriptions'

WOODSTOCK — In preparation for its spring and summer festival the offices of the National Shakespeare Company have opened at the Woodstock Playhouse. The spring series, which includes performances of KING LEAR, MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM and ANTIGONE, will begin on May 7 for a three week run which will include evening performances on May 11, 12, 18, 19, 25 and 26.

In conjunction with the opening of the offices at the Playhouse, the National Shakespeare Company is launching a subscription campaign for its July-August Series — "A Summer with Shakespeare and Friends". Performing in "rolling rep" with a different show every night will be AS YOU LIKE IT, KISS ME KATE, YOUR OWN THING, George Bernard Shaw's ST. JOAN, BOYS FROM SYRACUSE, and JULIUS CAESAR.

The subscription plan for the summer series will offer the subscriber guaranteed seating at a large saving in ticket price, says managing director Elaine Sulka. For a weekday subscription plan, the price of five shows at $22.50 enables the subscriber to attend six performances. Similarly, the price of five shows at $25 gives the subscriber six admissions to the weekend performances. There will not be an increase in seat prices for the musical productions presented. Both plans allow the subscriber to use the subscription in any combination of dates and performances of his choosing. He may use his entire six tickets on one evening, bringing five guests, or in any other combination he desires. For any information on the spring series, subscription plans, etc., the offices at Woodstock Playhouse will be open 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily, Monday through Friday, (914) 679-2015.



CAROL SEDESTROM'S "Gingerbread Quilt" would appear to be a very utilitarian bed covering indeed. Looks are deceiving, however. "Quilt" was one of the colorful creations in the recent Edible Art Show at The Gallery in New Paltz, and—as such—was an appetizing patchwork. Exhibit was a gala, one-day benefit event. 'Funny Thing' at New Paltz

MICHAEL BADALUCCO, as Pseudolus, and Richard Warwinski (the Protean), rehearse a scene from "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum." Musical comedy opens Tuesday, May 1 on the New Paltz campus.

The happy, crazy, decadent ways of ancient Rome will be on hand in New Paltz when the Department of Theatre Arts at the State University College presents A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum. This zany musical comedy is scheduled to be presented in the McKenna Theatre May 1-5, at 8:30 p.m. with a Sunday matinee, May 6, at 2 p.m.

The story concerns a crafty Roman slave named Pseudolus who will use any device necessary in his headlong quest for freedom. As slave to Hero, Pseudolus has been instructed by the youth's domineering mother to protect her son's innocence. Of course, with the house of courtesans next door, Hero is not very interested in being protected. Hero makes his choice and Pseudolus promises to help win her — if he gets his freedom. It soon develops however that others are interested in the same girl, including a Roman General and Hero's dirty old man of a father. The wily Pseudolus manages to stay one step ahead of an ever increasingly complicated situation.

Playwrights Larry Gelbart and Burt Shevelove based their play on the Roman comedies of Plautus, retaining much of his humor but also adding a great deal of their own to make this a modern musical sex comedy. The addition of Stephen Sondheim's songs make a truly enjoyable evening for all.

Tickets are now on sale at the McKenna Theatre Box Office. General admission is $2; student tickets are $1 with an ID card.

Reservations may be made by 'phoning 257-2192.

By JOAN L. WOINOSKi

Easter's come and gone! Spring is here with summer on its heels. And what dawned on us for the umpteenth time was: "Man, how times have changed!"

Remember when signs of spring meant chalk-marked sidewalks with girlfriends playin' Hopscotch . . . the noise of roller skates on cement pavement . . . marbles, jacks and jumpin' rope . . . the next door tomboy beatin's all the fellas in the block at stick-the-knife . . . kid sister "dressed-up" in Mom's old clothes and high-heeled shoes.

Remember when tiny tots in frilly sunsuits rushed outside to pick bouquets of violets and dandelions for Mom . . . when the biggest, juiciest scandals at school were those rambunctious youths who — while waitin' for the school bell to ring — sat there dunkin' classmates' pigtails in the inkwell.

Remember when after-school snacks meant bread 'n butter smothered with sugar . . . neighborhood boys 'n girls playin' hide 'n seek and kick-the can . . . evening rides in rumble-seated cars . . . little ones with long blond curls catchin' lightning bugs in jars . . . older sister and her beau courtin' in the backyard lawnswing.

REMEMBER WHEN COURTIN' MEANT "HOLDIN' HANDS?"

And what ever happened to the five cent ice cream cones . . . Cheerios with "free" on the stick . . . Saturday afternoon serials at the Orpheum . . . Popeye cartoons . . . singin' cowboys like Gene Autry and Roy Rogers . . . comic sidekicks like Smiley Burnett and Fuzzy Knight . . . trick horses like Silver and Trigger.

What happened to rocky-road ice cream at Zach Maroon's store and 10-cent comic books to trade with the kid next door . . . what happened to white knee socks and black patent leather shoes . . . what happened to penny candy and Sugar Daddys (the lollipops, that is).

And remember the 9 p.m. curfew, when you had to be home "as soon as the street lights go on" — and if you weren't Dad started calling loud and clear . . . remember how you hurried, hurried, hurried, so you could listen to Charlie McCarthy and the Lux Radio program before goin' to bed . . . remember when parents' most vulgar reprimand was "young whippersnapper" . . . remember when "Gone with the Wind" was considered ADULT movie fare.

Times have changed, man! Like what "square" would be caught dead in-this-day-and-age holdin' hands in a lawnswing. (What's a lawnswing?)

And can you picture today's teens wearin' anything but jeans? Why, nowadays the only way Mother can tell her daughter from her son is 'cause HIS hair is longer.

To each is own, no doubt. Yet, bein' old-fashioned at heart, we can't help but wonder: What's in store for '74?

THE 62 INTERSPERSED MEMBERS OF THE NEW PALTZ CONCERT CHOIR

For Them . . . Choral Music Is an Addiction!

NEW PALTZ

The coiled-spring energy of the conductor infects the group voice of the chorus as the opening note fills the rehearsal hall. The tempestous music of Zoltan Kodaly's "Jesus and the Traitors" storms forward, driven by the conductor's fiery enthusiasm.

Suddenly he yells: "Stop! Run through that part once more." The singers break off and begin again at the conductor's motion. This time the music surges even more cleanly and urgently than before.

The group sound is close and tight, disciplined but vibrant — as is the leader of the New Paltz Concert Choir, Dr. Peter Bagley, associate professor of music at the State University College at New Paltz.

Hear Them Today

The chorus, 62 strong, is rehearsing for a concert to be presented at 4 p.m. today, Sunday, April 29 at the New Paltz Reformed Church. The program will include religious and secular works ranging from Zoltan Kodaly to Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. A similar program was presented in Bellport, L.I. April 11.

The concert will come while reverberations of the choir's mid-February performances on the college campus still seem to echo among the academic buildings. The program then consisted of Mozart's Requiem in D Minor and Flute Concerto in D Major.

Professor Bagley described the experience as "physically exhilarating and spiritually exalting." He has a bundle of enthusiastic letters from people who attended the concert. One says: "Last night's performance of the Requiem burst from your musicians in a sumptuous release of joy . . . when the wave of music had passed, we were as drained as the performers — and tranquil." "My sincerest thanks," says another, "for bringing such a high caliber of excellence to New Paltz." A third commented: "Most of all, that sense of common experience, of well planned communication just passed itself around the theater again and again throughout the evening."

The enthusiasm of conductor and audience carries over to the choir. Vicki Bartz, tour manager and choir member, said of the experience: "That you can bring enough life to the Mozart Requiem to move an audience is a powerful experience." Cindy Ossias added: "We love music enough so that Catholics, atheists, and Jews can join successfully to sing a requiem mass."

Gave It Everything

Members of the choir speak of Dr. Bagley with wonderment that he can bring out of them qualities they didn't know they had. Ms. Ossias said: "We may sublimate any objections to a piece of music he submits to us and is enthusiastic about. For instance, last year, there was an objection — sound I feel — to Aaron Copland's "Stamp Your Foot" on the grounds that it makes women look stupid. But we overcame it and gave it everything we had.

"We are this loyal because Dr. Bagley happens to be a true musician and one of the finest conductors any of us has ever worked with."

The choir members are enthusiastic about the way they are arranged in concert. Rather than standing in sections of sopranos, altos, tenors and bases — each in one area — the voices are interspersed. Professor Bagley feels this creates a better sense of ensemble singing, and the members agree. Last spring the choir, at a program of Renaissance music, was arranged in quartets in the aisles and on the stage apron of the McKenna Theater on the New Paltz campus. Spectators were stunned by the sensation of being surrounded by sound.

Dr. Bagley, who is 37, came to SUC New Paltz in 1966 from Indiana University, where he was graduate assistant in the choral department while working toward the doctor of music degree. He lives in New Paltz with his wife and eight-year-old daughter. He is a graduate of the Crane Department of Music, State University College at Potsdam. From 1957 to 1961 he taught vocal music in the Greenwich, Conn. public schools, and he conducted a mixed chorus at the Shaker Village Work Group in Pittsfield, Mass. for several summers.

Truly Community

The Concert Choir is not simply a college choir; it is a community chorus. The composition is 60 per cent student, including a few high school seniors, and 40 per cent community residents. For the two weekly rehearsals, mothers often hire baby-sitters, students carrying full credit loads fit the rehearsals into their hectic routines, and business people interrupt busy schedules.

One of the sopranos, wife and mother, who is in her fifth year with the chorus said: "I need it. It makes me a full person."

Another member Eda Fagon, assistant conductor of the choir, retired two years ago as a teacher of music in a Brooklyn high school. "I sing second alto and wherever else I'm needed," she said. She refers to choral music as "an addiction."

John Van Ness, assistant to the dean of students at the college and part of the choir since September, agreed: "You're swimming with a stream of music all around you," he said. He described his experience with the choir as "cathartic," adding: "There is more involvement with my mind, body and spirit than in other activities. Also, it's really convenient that your instrument is always with you. There's no bulky luggage to carry around."

The equipment the choir members do bring, however, will be finely tuned when singers, conductor and audience again come together to create good music in New Paltz today, April 29.

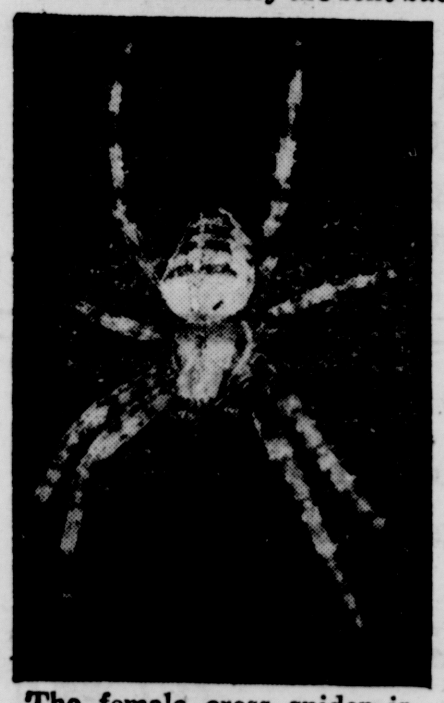
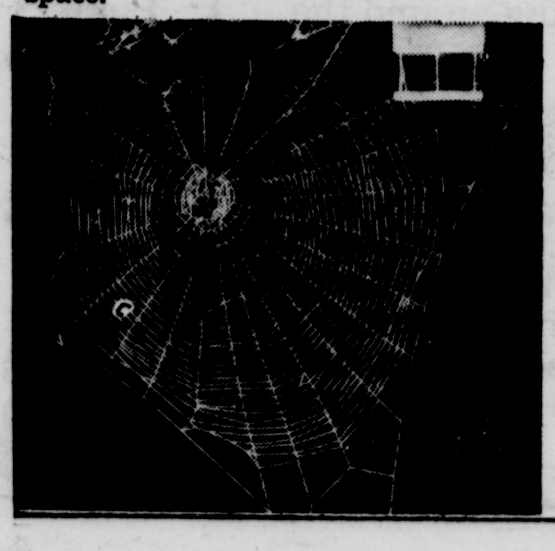
Can Spiders Spin Their Webs in Zero Gravity?

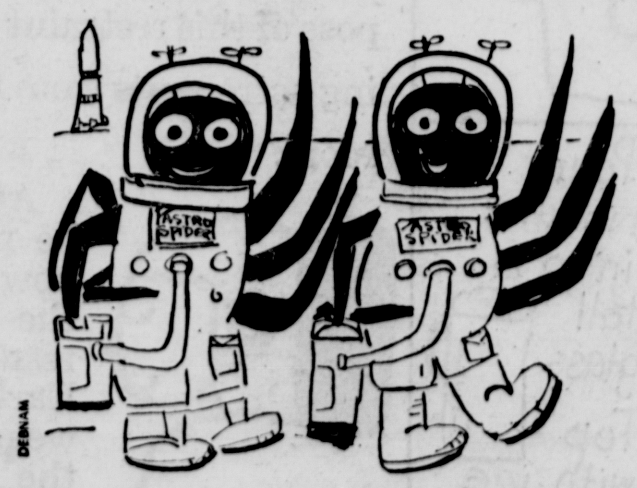
Mrs. Ruth Scarboro, research assistant, and Dr. Peter Witt, spider research specialist, feed a spider water in the Raleigh, North Carolina laboratory. The astronauts will use a similar method when they give spiders water in space. Dr. Witt has been the chief advisor to NASA's spider in space experiment. He will analyze the pictures when they are sent back from space.



The female cross spider is the kind to be sent into space.

Judith Miles, a high school student from Lexington, Mass. discusses the spider experiment she proposed in a NASA contest held last year.





The normal web of the cross spider (left). It will be fun to compare with the pictures sent from space.

Can spiders spin webs under weightless conditions? This is one of the many experiments to be conducted as part of the Skylab mission. Skylab is our country's first space station.

Experiments will be conducted to collect information about man, his planet Earth, and the Sun. Scientists will also experiment to see if spiders can spin webs in zero gravity.

The spiders will be sent to Skylab with the third astronaut crew. They will be carried in a small box. The trip to Skylab will take about seven hours. As soon as possible, the spiders will be put into separate cages already stored aboard. The crew will give the spiders water. The insects will get no food since carrying live flies into space would be a problem. Cameras will take pictures which will be relayed back to Earth.

The type of spider chosen for this mission is the female cross spider. This spider was picked because it weaves a web almost every day.

Why on earth send spiders into space?

According to Dr. Peter Witt, world famous spider research expert, no other living thing can express itself in such an easily predictable and measurable way as a spider when it weaves a web. After years of research, Dr. Witt knows exactly what kind of web the female cross spider, at a certain age, will weave. This spider is dependable because web building is its strongest instinct. It must build a web to trap food.

By knowing so much about spider behavior on earth, Dr. Witt can easily compare it with spider behavior in space by examining the web pictures.

This experiment was suggested by Judith Miles, a high school student from Lexington, Mass. She was one of the winners in a contest sponsored by NASA, in which some 35,000 students suggested experiments. Nineteen student experiments will be carried out during Skylab mission.

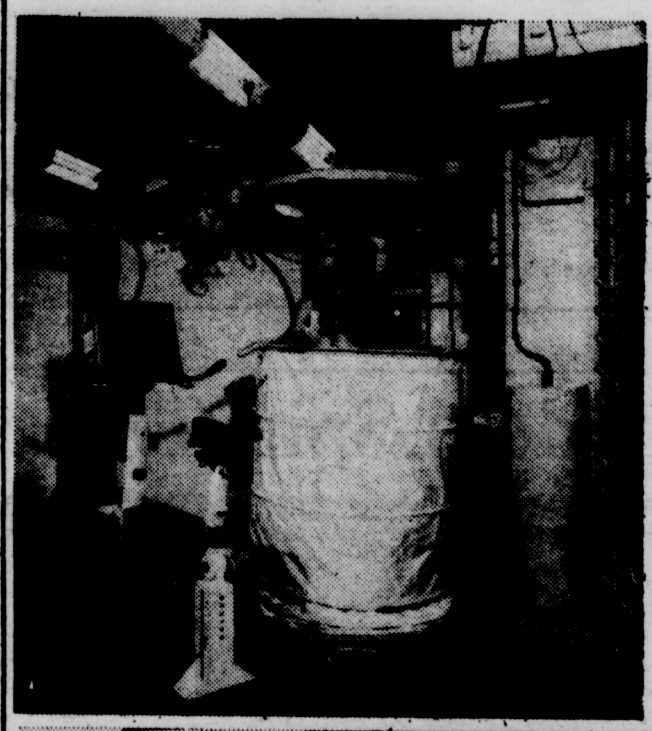
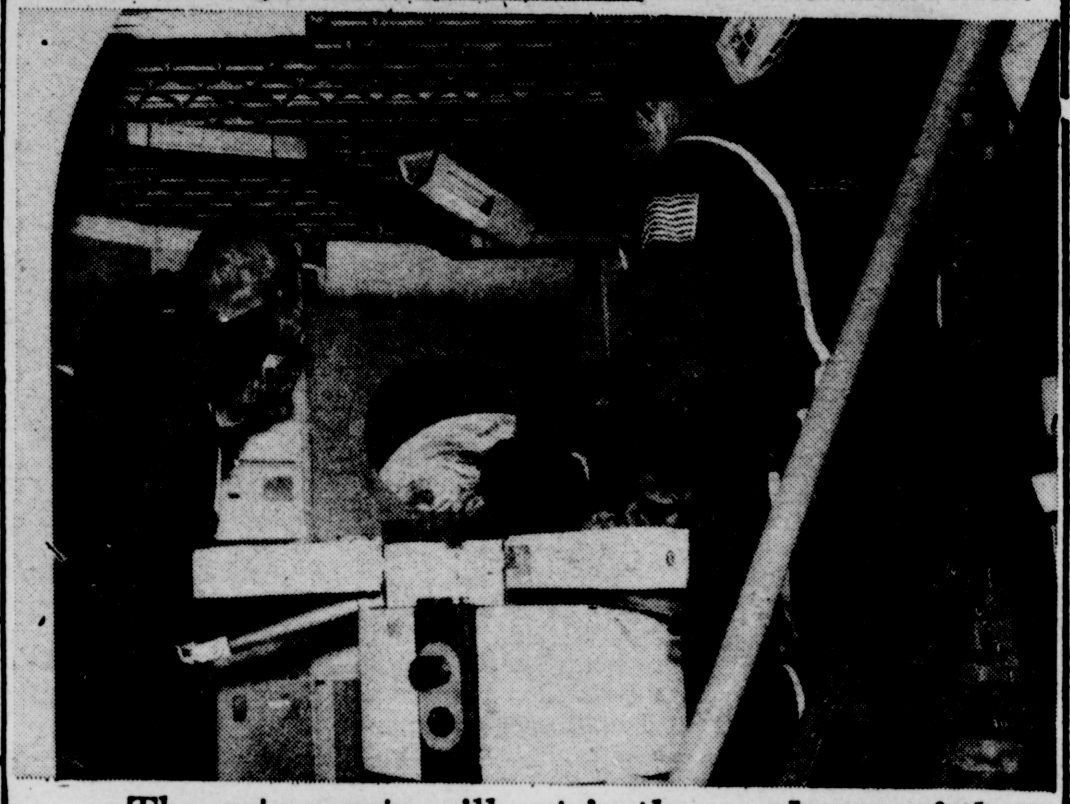
Bathing and Eating in Space



The astronauts will use a compact shower which is stored on the floor of Skylab when not in use. Astronauts step inside the ring and extend the fireproof curtain, which attaches to the ceiling, and they have an instant shower. Each astronaut may use three quarts of water when he bathes.



The astronauts will eat in the wardroom of the workshop. They appear to be standing but are being held in place by seats attached to the eating table. Under weightless conditions, ordinary chairs or stools cannot be used.

How will astronauts sleep in space?

The astronauts will sleep in lightweight sleeping bags. These bags will be attached to the wall of each private sleeping compartment. The main purpose of this restraint is to keep the sleeping astronauts from floating around the room.

At times, sleeping will be monitored to find out how much and how well the astronauts sleep. The results will be sent back to Earth. The astronauts will wear special caps during the time they are monitored.

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: WHEN, UNDER THE WRECKAGE OF THE CORNICE, THE PRESUMED BODY OF PRINCE HEIDMAR IS FOUND, THERE IS GREAT CONSTERNATION.

WHEN GRIMNER HEARS THE TRAGIC NEWS HIS "GRIEF" IS SO GREAT HE CAN HARDLY SUPPRESS A GRIN.

BUT HE PROVES HE HAS THE QUALITIES OF KINGSHIP BY ORDERING THE IMMEDIATE EXECUTION OF THE WORKMEN WHO REPAIRED THE CORNICE. THEY ALONE KNOW THE CORNICE WOULD NOT HAVE FALLEN WITHOUT AID.

FRIEDA, HIS BRIDE-TO-BE, APPROVES THE DEED: "IT IS FOR THE GOOD OF THE KINGDOM THAT ANY SOURCE OF SCANDAL BE SUPPRESSED IMMEDIATELY," SHE AFFIRMS.

FROM THE STEPS OF A TAVERN, HEIDMAR VIEWS HIS OWN FUNERAL WITH SATISFACTION. EVERY DETAIL IS EFFICIENTLY CARRIED OUT, EXCEPT THAT THE SHATTERED BODY IN THE COFFIN IS NOT HIS.

THE PRINCESS FRIEDA, DRESSED BECOMINGLY IN BLACK, RIDES BESIDE GRIMNER, THE HEIR APPARENT. BY HER POISE AND THE SET OF HER CHIN IT IS EASY TO GUESS WHO WILL EVENTUALLY RULE THE KINGDOM OF HOLVIK.
